Board adjourned to meet Wednesday April 8, 1896 at 9 o'clock a. m.

FRANK FITZGERALD,
Chairman.
Attest: D. J. HESSION, Clerk.

MARKLEEVILLE, April, 4, 1896.

I. H. MULHOLLAND,

EDITOR INDEPENDENT:—Will you not kindly state in the INDEPENDENT that, on the occasion of my next visit to Independence, I will reply to the very kind invitation extended to me by many of the people of Inyo County to become a resident of the County and also a candidate for Judge of the Superior Court of Inyo County?

I shall not be able to make answer to the very kind suggestion made to me to become one of you, until I shall have first had opportunity to visit the County again which I am informed will be about May 12th prox. Very sincerely,

N. D. AVNOR.

From Absaroka.

D. M. Rogers is cutting posts in the Inyo Mountains with which to fence his quarter section.

Mr. James Jenkins was down to Georges Creek on Saturday. Mrs. Jenkins with her little daughters, has been with her parents there for several weeks.

Capt. A. L. Conklin has had a band of shearers at work on his flock the past week. The yield of wool is good. It was placed on board the cars on Tuesday to be shipped to San Francisco.

The Railroad Company have a corps of men at the station sawing and piling two hundred cords of wood for use on their engines. They expect to be about four days at the job.

Struck by a Dead Hand.

Said Henry Billings, a retired railroad engineer:

"I was running a night train on the Santa Fe road back in the seventies. This particular night had been stormy and threatening, and the flashes of lightning were frequent and intense. We were running ahead of our schedule in order to make a siding in time to allow an extra to pass us, and were traveling, I suppose, at the rate of about 30 or 35 miles an hour.

"I was sitting with my face close to the forward window of the cab, gazing straight ahead, when in a brilliant blaze of electricity a man's arm and head suddenly burst with great force through the glass and the open hand struck me squarely in the face. I was dazed for an instant by the blow, and held blindly to the side of the cab. My first thought was that some tramp was trying to hold up my train to rob the passengers, and, acting on this idea, I seized my wrench from its place and dealt the head of the intruder a blow with all my might.

"The fireman, thinking I had killed the man, shut off steam and we slowed down and took our lanterns to examine the strange visitor. I could not describe the feeling that crept over me when I climbed upon the engine and looked at the man whom I believed had attacked me. His entire body below the arms was gone. It was easy to understand what had happened. He had been struck by the rapidly moving engine and his body severed as with a knife, the lower half falling to one side and the head and arms flying straight through the cab window."—Atlanta Journal.

Leaves That Are Fifty Feet Long.

In our temperate climate none of the trees has leaves of a size that will even compare favorably with those of the sea island and tropical countries in general. The maple, the oak and the elm leaves are but infinitesimal bits of green when compared with the gigantic sheets of velvety verdure found on some of the trees, shrubs and plants of South and Central America.

The South American tree which has the largest leaf is the Inaja palm, which grows on the banks of the Amazon. The leaves of this giant are often 50 feet in length, but they are very narrow, seldom exceeding 8 to 10 feet. With the Ceylonese cocoanut palm it is different. In that species the leaves are from 20 to 25 feet in length and from 16 to 18 in width. The natives of Ceylon are said to use these leaves in tentmaking, three or four being sufficient to make a shelter for a whole family. An extraordinary specimen of Ceylonese palm leaf now in the British museum, and which must be a freak—because the average length and breadth of the leaves of this variety of trees do not exceed the figures given above—is 36 feet in length and 28 in width, even though it is admitted that it must have shrunk one-fifth in drying.—St. Louis Republic.

Neighbor was originally nigh boor, or the nearest residing farmer.

Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness, without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, then laxatives or other remedies are not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, then one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction.

THE TRANSLATION OF A SAVAGE.

BY GILBERT PARKER

AUTHOR OF "THE CHIEF FACTOR," "PIERRE AND HIS PEOPLE" ETC.

COPYRIGHT, 1893, BY THE J. B. LIPPINCOTT CO.

Had she written out an elaborate proclamation of her intended attitude toward her husband it could not have more clearly conveyed her mind than this little speech, delivered as to a most friendly acquaintance. General Armour pulled his mustache fiercely, and, it is possible, enjoyed the situation despite its peril. Mrs. Armour turned to the mantel and seemed tremulously engaged in arranging some bric-a-brac. Marion, however, with a fine instinct, slid her arm through that of Lali and gently said: "Yes, of course Frank will be glad of a ride in the park. He used to ride with me every morning. But let us go, us three, and kiss the baby good night—'good night till we meet in the morning.'" She linked her arm through Frank's, and as she did so he replied to Lali, "I shall be glad to ride in the morning, but"——

"But we can arrange it at breakfast," said his wife hurriedly. At the same time she allowed herself to be drawn away to the hall with her husband.

He was angry, but he knew he had no right to be so. He choked back his wrath and moved on amiably enough, and suddenly the fashion in which the tables had been turned on him struck him with its tragic comedy, and he involuntarily smiled. His sense of humor saved him from words and acts which might possibly have made the matter a pure tragedy after all. He loosed his arm from Marion's.

"I must bid our father and mother good night. Then I will join you both 'in the court of the king.'" And he turned and went back and said to his father as he kissed his mother, "I am had at an advantage, general."

"And serves you right, my boy. You had the odds with you. She has captured them like a born soldier."

His mother said to him gently: "Frank, you blamed us, but remember that we wished only your good. Take my advice, dear, try to love your wife and win her confidence."

"Love her—try to love her!" he said. "I shall easily do that. But the other"—He shook his head a little, though what he meant perhaps he did not know himself, and then followed Marion and Lali up stairs. Marion had tried to escape from Lali, but was told that she must stay, and the three met at the child's cot. Marion stooped down and kissed its forehead. Frank stooped also and kissed its cheek. Then the wife kissed the other cheek. The child slept peacefully on.

"You can always see the baby here before breakfast if you choose," said Lali, and she held out her hand again in good night. At this point Marion stole away in spite of Lali's quick little cry of "Wait, Marion!" and the two were left alone again.

"I am very tired," she said. "I would rather not talk tonight." The dismissal was evident. He took her hand, held it an instant and presently said: "I will not detain you, but I would ask you, Lali, to remember that you are my wife. Nothing can alter that."

"Still we are only strangers, as you know," she quietly rejoined.

"You forget the days we were together after we were married," he cautiously urged.

"I am not the same girl. You killed her. We have to start again. I know all."

"You know that in my wretched anger and madness I"——

"Oh, please do not speak of it!" she said. "It is so bad even in thought."

"But will you never forgive me and care for me? We have to live our lives together."

"Pray let us not speak of it now," she said in a weary voice. Then breathlessly, "It is of much more consequence that you should love me — and the child."

He drew himself up with a choking sigh and spread out his arms to her. "Oh, my wife!" he said.

"No, no," she cried, "this is unreasonable. We know so little of each other. Good night again."

He turned at the door, came back, and stooping kissed the child on the lips. Then he said: "You are right. I deserve to suffer. Good night."

But when he was gone she dropped on her knees and kissed the child many times on the lips also.

CHAPTER IX.

When Francis Armour left his wife's room, he did not go to his own room, but quietly descended the stairs, went to the library and sat down. The loneliest thing in the world is to be tete-a-tete with one's conscience. A man may have a bad hour with an enemy, a sad hour with a friend, a peaceful hour with himself, but when the little dwarf, conscience, perches upon every hillock of remembrance and makes slow signs—those symbols of the language of the soul—to him, no slave upon the treadmill suffers more.

The butler came in to see if anything was required, but Armour only greeted him silently and waved him away. His brain was painfully alert, his memory singularly awake. It seemed that the incident of this hour had so opened up every channel of his intelligence that all his life ran past him in fantastic panorama, as by that illumination which comes to the drowning man. He seemed under some strange spell. Once or twice he rose, rubbed his eyes and looked round the room—the room where, as a boy, he had spent idle hours, where, as a student, he had been in the hands of his tutor, and as a young man had found recreations such as belong to ambitious and ardent youth. Every corner was familiar. Nothing was changed. The books upon the shelves were as they were placed 20 years ago. And yet he did not seem a part of it. It did not seem natural to him. He was in an atmosphere of strangeness—that atmosphere which surrounds a man, as by a cloud, when some crisis comes upon him, and his life seems to stand still, whirling upon its narrow base, while the world appears at an interminable distance, even as to a deaf man who sees, yet cannot hear.

There came home to him at that moment, with a force indescribable, the shamelessness of the act he committed four years ago. He had thought to come back to miserable humiliation. For four years he had refused to do his duty as a man toward an innocent woman, a woman, though in part a savage, now transformed into a gentle, noble creature of delight and goodness. How had he deserved it? He had sown the storm; it was but just that he should reap the whirlwind. He had scattered thistles; could he expect to gather grapes? He knew that the sympathy of all his father's house was not with him, but with the woman he had wronged. He was glad it was so.

Looking back now, it seemed so poor and paltry a thing that he, a man, should stoop to revenge himself upon those who had given him birth as a kind of insult to the woman who had lightly set him aside and should use for that purpose a helpless confiding girl. To revenge one's self for wrong to one's self is but a common passion, which has little dignity; to avenge some one whom one has loved, man or woman—and before all, woman—has some touch of nobility, is redeemed by loyalty. For his act there was not one word of defense to be made, and he was not prepared to make it.

The cigars and liquors were beside him, but he did not touch them. He seemed very far away from the ordinary details of his life. He knew he had before him hard travel, and he was not confident of the end. He could not tell how long he sat there. After a time the ticking of the clock seemed painfully loud to him. Now and again he heard a cab rattling through the square, and the foolish song of some drunken loiterer in the night caused him to start painfully. Everything jarred on him. Once he got up, went to the window and looked out. The moon was shining full on the square. He wondered if it would be well for him to go out and find some quiet to his nerves in walking. He did so. Out in the square he looked up to his wife's window. It was lighted. Long time he walked up and down, his eyes on the window. It held him like a charm. Once he leaned against the iron railings of the garden and looked up, not moving for a time. Presently he saw the curtain of the window raised, and against the dim light of the room was outlined the figure of his wife. He knew it. She stood for a moment looking out into the night. She could not see him, nor could he see her features at all plainly, but he knew that she, like him, was alone with the catastrophe which his wickedness had sent upon her. Soon the curtain was drawn down again, and then he went once more to the house and took his old seat beside the table. He fell to brooding and at last, exhausted, dropped into a troubled sleep.

He woke with a start. Some one was in the room. He heard a step behind him. He came to his feet quickly, a wild light in his eyes. He faced his brother Richard.

Late in the afternoon Marion had telegraphed to Richard that Frank was coming. He had been away visiting some poor and sick people, and when he came back to Greyhope it was too late to catch the train. But the horses were harnessed straightway, and he was driven into town—a three hours' drive. He had left the horses at the stables, and having a latchkey had come in quietly. He had seen the light in the study and guessed who was there. He entered and saw his brother asleep. He watched him for a moment and studied him. Then he moved away to take off his hat, and as he did so stumbled slightly. Then it was Frank waked, and for the first time in five years they looked each other in the eyes. They both stood immovable for a moment, and then Richard caught Frank's hand in both of his and said: "God bless you, my boy; God bless you! I am glad you are back!"

"Dick, Dick!" was the reply, and Frank's other hand clutched Richard's shoulder in his strong emotion. They stood silent for a moment longer, and then Richard recovered himself. He waved his hand to the chairs. The strain of the situation was a little painful for them both. Men are shy with each other where their emotions are in play.

"Why, my boy," he said, waving a hand to the wine and liquors, "full bottles and unopened boxes? Tut, tut! Here's a pretty how d' ye do. Is this the way you toast the home quarters? You're a fine soldier for an old mess!"

So saying, he poured out some whisky, then opened the box of cigars and pushed them toward his brother. He did not care particularly to drink or smoke himself, but a man—an Englishman—is a strange creature. He is most natural and at ease when he is engaged in eating and drinking. He relieves every trying situation by some frivolous and selfish occupation, as of dismembering a partridge or mixing a punch.

"Well, Frank," said his brother, "now what have you to say for yourself? Why didn't you come long ago? You have played the adventurer for five years, and what have you to show for it? Have you a fortune?" Frank shook his head and twisted a shoulder. "What have you done that is worth the doing then?"

"Nothing that I intended to do, Dick," was the grave reply.

"Yes, I imagined that. You have seen them, have you, Frank?" he added in a softer voice.

Frank blew a great cloud of smoke about his face, and through it he said, "Yes, Dick, I have seen a d—d sight more than I deserve to see."

"Oh, of course, I know that, my boy! But, so far as I can see, in another direction you are getting quite what you deserve. Your wife and child are up stairs; you are here."

He paused, was silent for a moment, then leaned over, caught his brother's arm and said in a low, strenuous voice: "Frank Armour, you laid a hateful little plot for us. It wasn't manly, but we forgave it and did the best we could. But, see here, Frank, take my word for it, you have had a lot of luck. There isn't one woman out of 10,000 that would have stood the test as your wife has stood it. Injured at the start, constant neglect, temptation"—he paused. "My boy, did you ever think of that—of the temptation to a woman neglected by her husband? The temptation to men? Yes, you have had a lot of luck. There has been a special providence for you, my boy, but not for your sake. God doesn't love neglectful husbands, but I think he is pretty sorry for neglected wives."

Frank was very still. His head dropped, the cigar hung unheeded in his fingers for a moment, and he said at last: "Dick, old comrade, I've thought it all over tonight since I came back—everything that you've said. I have not a word of defense to make, but, by heaven, I'm going to win my wife's love if I can, and when I do it I'll make up for all my cursed foolishness! See if I don't!"

"That sounds well, Frank," was the quiet reply. "I like to hear you talk that way. You would be very foolish if you did not. What do you think of the child?"

"Can you ask me what I think? He is a splendid little fellow."

"Take care of him then. Take good care of him. You may never have another," was the grim rejoinder.

Frank winced. His brother rose, took his arm and said: "Let us go to our rooms, Frank. There will be time enough to talk later, and I am not so young as I once was."

Truth to say, Richard Armour was not so young as he seemed a few months before. His shoulders were a little stooped; he was grayer about the temples. The little bit of cynicism which had appeared in that remark about the care of the child showed also in the lines of his mouth, yet his eyes had the same old, true, honest look. But a man cannot be hit in mortal places once or twice in his life without it being etched on his face or dropped, like a pinch of aloe, from his tongue.

Still they sat and talked much longer, Frank showing better than when his brother came, Richard gone gray and tired. At last Richard rose and motioned toward the window. "See, Frank," he said, "it is morning." Then he went and lifted the blind. The gray, unpurged air oozed on the glass. The light was breaking over the tops of the houses. A crossing sweeper, early to his task or holding the key of the street, went pottering by, and a policeman glanced up at them as he passed. Richard drew down the curtain again.

"Dick," said Frank suddenly, "you look old. I wonder if I have changed as much?"

Six months before Frank Armour would have said that his brother looked young.

"Oh, you look young enough, Frank," was the reply, "but I am a good deal older than I was five years ago. Come, let us go to bed."

Many weeks afterward an anxious family stood about the cot of a sick child.

Richard caught Frank's hand in both of his.

The family doctor had just left the room. Marion, turning to the father and mother, said: "Greyhope will be like itself again now. I will go and tell Richard that the danger is over."

As she turned to do so Richard opened the door and came in. "I have seen the doctor," he began in his cheerful tones, "and the little chap is going to pull along now like a house afire." Tapping his brother affectionately on the shoulder, he was about to continue, but he saw what stopped him. He saw the beginning of the end of Frank Armour's tragic comedy. He and Marion left the room as quickly as was possible to him, for, as he said humorously, "he was slow at a quick march," and a moment after the wife heard, without demur, her husband's tale of love for her.

Yet, as if to remind him of the wrong he had done, heaven never granted Frank Armour another child.

THE END.

About Girls.

"Girls," remarked the small boy in his composition upon the subject, "is of several thousand kinds, and sometimes one girl can behave like several thousand girls. Some kinds of girls is better than some other kinds, but they ain't any of them up to boys. This is all I know about girls, and father says the less I know about 'em the better."—New York Advertiser.

WHAT'S A BUMP?

In our peculiar vernacular, we say a bump on a log and a bump on a human being. What one might call a bump another one would call a thump. Thus we have a bump from a thump and a thump from a bump. In a like manner, a bruise may cause a bump, and a bump may cause a bruise, or perhaps a thump may cause both. Well, what's the difference, so long as we suffer from either bump or bruise, we want to get rid of it. That's true, and the surest, quickest way to cure a bruise is at once to use St. Jacob's Oil. Then the question will be not what it is, but what it was, as it will promptly disappear.

NEVER TOO LATE.

Premature Old Age Made Impossible.

A Life-Time Habit Easily Broken. It's Easy if You Only Take the Right Road.

(From The Press, Everett, Pa.)

A number of our great and most inveterate tobacco smokers and chewers have quit the use of the filthy weed. The reform was started by Aaron Gorber, who was a confirmed slave for many years to the use of tobacco. He tried the use of No-To-Bac, and to his great surprise and delight, it cured him.

Hon. C. W. Ashcom, who had been smoking for sixty years, tried No-To-Bac and it cured him.

Col. Samuel Stoutener, who would eat up tobacco like a cow eats hay, tried this wonderful remedy, and even Samuel, after all his years of slavery, lost the desire.

J. C. Cobler, Lessing Evans, Frank Dell, Geo. B. May, C. O. Skillington, Hanson Robinett, Frank Hershberger, John Shinn and others have since tried No-To-Bac, and in every case they report, not only a cure of the tobacco habit, but a wonderful improvement in their general physical and mental condition, all of which goes to show that the use of tobacco had been injurious to them in more ways than one.

All of the above gentlemen are so well pleased with the results that we do not hesitate to join them in recommending it to suffering humanity, as we have thoroughly investigated and are satisfied that No-To-Bac does the work well and is a boon to mankind.

The cost is trifling, and three boxes are guaranteed to cure any case, or money refunded. One box in every instance stated above effected a cure, with one or two exceptions. No-To-Bac has a wonderful sale upon its merits alone, and can be secured at almost any drug store in this country or Canada. It is made by the Sterling Remedy Co., Chicago, Montreal or New York. Our readers are warned against purchasing imitations, as there are several on the market. Be sure you get No-To-Bac. Then you're all right.

A Mystery of the Law.

In a case not 1,000 miles from Fort Worth, after a killer was acquitted, the wife of the victim brought a suit against him and was promptly awarded a considerable sum by way of damages. The verdict was upheld by the supreme court. The criminal law said the slayer was innocent. The civil law said he was guilty. If the latter was wrong, he was robbed of his sustenance by the law, with the connivance of the supreme court.—Fort Worth (Tex.) Gazette.

The Inquisitive Small Boy.

"Father," said the little boy, looking up from his picture book, "if I ask you a question, will you answer it?"

"Certainly," was the affable reply.

"And not get angry?"

"Of course not."

"Nor say it's time I was in bed?"

"I won't do any of those things."

"Well, what I want to know is where does a snake begin when it wags its tail?"—Washington Star.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An Elixir of Life.

T. A. Slocum Offers to Send Two Bottles Free of His Remedy to Cure Consumption and all Lung Troubles.

Nothing could be fairer, more philanthropic or carry more joy in its wake than the offer of T. A. Slocum, M. C., of 183 Pearl Street, New York. Perfectly confident that he has an absolute remedy for the cure of consumption and all pulmonary complaints, he offers through this paper to send two bottles free to any reader who is suffering from lung trouble or consumption, also loss of flesh and all conditions of wasting. He invites those desirous of obtaining this remedy to send their express and post-office address, and to receive in return the two bottles free, which will arrest the approach of death. Already this remedy, by its timely use, has permanently cured thousands of cases which were given up, and death was looked upon as an early visitor.

Knowing his remedy as he does, and being so proof-positive of its beneficent results, Dr. Slocum considers it his religious duty, a duty which he owes to humanity, to donate his infallible remedy where it will assault the enemy in its citadel, and, by its inherent potency, stay the current of dissolution, bringing joy to homes over which the shadow of the grave has been gradually growing more strongly defined, causing fond hearts to grieve. The cheapness of the remedy—offered freely—apart from its inherent strength, is enough to commend it, and more so is the perfect confidence of the great chemist making the offer, who holds out life to those already becoming emaciated, and says: "Be cured."

The invitation is certainly worthy of the consideration of the afflicted, who, for years, have been taking nauseous nostrums without effect; who have ostracised themselves from home and friends to live in more salubrious climes, where the atmosphere is more congenial to weakened lungs, and who have fought against death with all the weapons and strength in their hands. There will be no mistake in sending for these free bottles—the mistake will be in passing the invitation by.

ONE LITTLE HOUR ERE DAY.

The while I sleeping lay
One little hour ere day,
Before my window on the tree
A swallow sang this song to me,
One little hour ere day.

Now listen to my lay,
Thy lover I betray.
The while I sing this song to thee
Another maiden kisseth he,
One little hour ere day.

Oh, me, no further say!
Ah, hush, no more betray!
Fly, swallow, from my sill away.
Ah, love and faith, a dream are they
One little hour ere day.

CHOLLY'S STORY.

It was too warm an evening, even for a smoking concert, Cholly said as he came out of his room, attired all in white, looking a perfect picture of manly beauty. Cholly was a blond specimen of the male sex, blue eyed, golden haired, a stalwart representative of the Saxon type. He was 27, well placed as regards this world's wealth and position. Life to him—thanks to old Egerton Bailey, his late father—was a pleasant pastime, the world a charmed play place, where girls worshiped him and men voted him a trump. So much for Cholly, debonair, kind hearted and handsome, who had traveled the world over, making friends wherever he went.

Cholly's prediction that it was too warm even for a smoking concert on this particular evening was verified by the slim attendance there on his arrival. Only eight men out of the 30 expected found their way to the usual rendezvous. By general agreement the music was banished, coats discarded, negligee attitudes assumed, and the eight men amused themselves by relating anecdotes and personal experiences.

"By the way, Cholly," at last a friend said to the blond Adonis, who, sprawled on a sofa, was listening quietly to the conversation, "you're very silent tonight. You've just arrived from the west too. Come, haven't you some blood curdling tale to tell us of western atrocities, cowboy 'breaks' or Coxey outrages? These fellows' stories are stale. We require something spicy to stir us up a night like this."

"Well, I did have an adventure, but its recital won't be spicy, Tracy. I don't think it will be the style you care for."

"Out with it! Out with it!" seven voices simultaneously exclaimed. "Is it a Christian Endeavor story, Cholly?" asked Tracy. "You do look awful solemn."

"No; it's a Sunday school talk," said Andy Vicars, a very young man with a new mustache and a drawl.

"All right," said Cholly quietly; "if you fellows don't be quiet, I won't tell it."

"Go on, Cholly. Don't mind the calves," grunted old Major Poole. "Tell us your story, man."

"It will interest you, major. Doubtless you remember the Donovans of Limerick—pretty Kate, they called one of them. I met them in Dublin."

"Do I remember her? May me eyes fall out of me head if I ever see her likes again—eyes like violets, hair like ink and a skin like peaches and cream. And a figger! God bless you, boys, she had a figger like a goddess. She could ride cross country like a bird. Never saw such a rider before nor since. But, Cholly, me boy, I thought you were 'gone' in that direction. Oh, the pair you'd have made!"

Cholly blushed scarlet; the company exchanged glances. "Seems to me," said Andy Vicars, "that the major's telling this story. Go on, Cholly; hold the platform." So Cholly cleared his throat, as Andy said afterward he seemed mightily upset by the major's remarks, wiped the perspiration from his flushed face and began:

"You see, fellows, my story will have to consist of two parts, the introduction and the sequel. It begins in Ireland four years ago and ends in Canada four days ago. It was in Dublin that I first met Miss Kate Donovan of Limerick. She was a stunner, as the major says, the best cross country rider I ever saw. She was poor as a church mouse and proud as Lucifer. She was an orphan; had been brought up by her uncle, old Peter Donovan. He had three daughters of his own, but none of them could hold a candle to Miss Kate herself. From what I saw during the time I was in Dublin I don't think the trio cared much for pretty Kate; they were jealous of her and took pains to show it in many petty ways, particularly when Captain Gordon, who was considered a matrimonial catch, appeared on the scene and devoted himself to Kate."

"Captain Rupert Gordon of the Forty-seventh?" queried Major Poole.

"The very same, a dark beggar, with a bad mouth and lots of money.

"Well, he was the man that set all the Dublin girls wild. They literally lionized him. He was douce enough there. He was asked everywhere, and old Peter Donovan was mad enough when he asked him for his niece and not for one of his daughters. They said the three girls never spoke to Kate for weeks.

"Poor Kate! She hardly knew what to do. She was very unhappy. She told me all about it one evening at a dance. She had a devil of a life in her uncle's house, and Gordon seemed very fond of her. She didn't know what he really was; neither did I, or I could have warned her. They were married in September. In November Gordon took her to the Riviera after the honeymoon was over. A fellow who met them there told me that Kate—that is, Mrs. Gordon—looked miserably unhappy, and people said Gordon ill treated her. However that may be, she did not stay with him very long. One day a woman appeared at the hotel where they were staying. She was a gaudily attired specimen, not overcultured. She registered as Mrs. Captain Gordon and forced herself into the Gordon private rooms. Gordon hadn't a word to say. He owned up that he had married her five years before somewhere, where his regiment was stationed—I forget where. There was a terrible scene, which ended by Kate leaving the hotel. No one knew where she went. My friend, an Englishman, who told me just what I have told you, tried to follow her and offered to do what he could for her in a monetary way. He was a gentleman and meant well by her. She refused all offers of assistance and disappeared as if the Mediterranean had swallowed her up. He heard of her again at Marseilles. She had been singing in a cafe there. She always had a passable voice and played the banjo well. Poor Kate! Her pride was dragged in the dust; her heart was broken."

Cholly paused to wipe the perspiration from his face and take a few sips from a tumbler beside him. The old major, for a wonder, kept silence, from time to time shaking his head sorrowfully.

"I suppose that is the first part of the story," broke in Andy Vicars. "It is deuced sad. Hope the little girl got back to her uncle."

"Uncle!" growled Major Poole. "Poor child! He didn't want her. He was a cruel hearted, mean old scoundrel, was Peter Donovan. He never treated the girl right when he had her."

Cholly nodded his head affirmatively to Major Poole's assertion and continued his story:

"This all happened four years ago. No one heard anything during that time of pretty Kate Donovan, for, you see, she wasn't Mrs. Gordon, after all. An aunt of hers did have the grace to write to me, making inquiries. She had heard that Kate was in the United States, in a place called Pennsylvania, and would I make inquiries, as I lived, no doubt, near there? You know, these old country people, as they call themselves, think that the United States are about as large as an English county."

"Do I know it?" interrupted the major. "Why, a lady in London once asked me to personally deliver a small parcel of china to her daughter because I lived in New York, near where her daughter was settled. I took the parcel, thinking to see the address of some street here. Where do you think the fair creature lived?"

"New Jersey?" hazarded Vicars.

"Maine?" queried another.

"No!" roared the major. "Idaho!"

"Guess you didn't accept the commission, major," said Cholly.

"Well, no. I relieved my mind by reciting sundry words not in Webster's Dictionary. Go on, my boy. Tell us all you know of pretty Kate Donovan."

"I came through Canada on my way from the west a few days ago," continued Cholly. "We changed cars at a place not far from Toronto and had some hours to wait for connection. Strolling around, I came to a place where a circus was in full swing—double tent, side shows, all complete. Consulting my watch, I found I had time to see the performance. An English steeplechase was advertised as the chief attraction. It had just commenced when I took my seat in the first row, close to the ring. I can hardly tell you my feelings when I recognized the first lady rider who entered. It was Kate Donovan."

"Good heavens!" ejaculated the major. "Come to that?"

"Yes; it was Kate, graceful, lithe, nervy as ever, looking like a queen among those painted judys and rough men."

"How could you sit there and see it?" groaned Major Poole.

"I hadn't to sit long. I recognized her instantly, and, poor girl, she saw me!"

"Knew you?" gasped the major.

"Yes; she turned pale under the horrible paint and rouge she was daubed with. Somehow she seemed to lose her nerve all of a sudden. The horse, a vicious black beast, swerved to one side suddenly—major, fellows, I cannot tell it, it was too horrible."

"Kate Donovan to lose her nerve on horseback? I cannot credit it," said the major in an awed tone.

"I was in the ring and by her side in a moment," Cholly continued, not noticing the major's interruption. "She knew me, poor girl, when her eyes opened for the first time. She died with her hands tightly clasped in mine."

"Did she say anything?" asked Andy Vicars. "Did she tell you anything?"

"If she did, you're not the one I'd repeat it to," said Cholly fiercely. "The last words of a poor dying girl are hardly club talk, not if I know it."

So saying, Cholly seized his coat and strode angrily from the room.

The other men looked at each other significantly.

"He's hit hard," said the major. "Poor fellow! If you had seen Kate, you'd not blame him. I always thought he liked her."

And Cholly, as he strode along the street homeward, cursed his own folly in telling the story of pretty Kate to such an audience. "As if they cared," he muttered. They were a set of hard hearted, cold, cynical men, and he (Cholly) was a fool for telling the story. Somehow he had never realized before that he had cherished an ideal for the past four years, and that ideal was the woman who but a few days before had died in his arms. Tell that idiot Vicars what she said? Cholly smiled grimly as the thought struck him, for only he knew what those last words had been. They echoed in his ears even now in the din and noise of the New York evening:

"Cholly, dear—dear Cholly!"

If she had only said them four years ago, he thought miserably as he shoved his key into the latch of his home door.
—Vanity.

WASHINGTON OF CUBA

GOMEZ' SUPERB HANDLING OF THE REVOLUTIONARY ARMY.

A Letter From an English Cavalry Officer Who Is Now on the General's Staff—The March From Santiago to Santa Clara. How the Warfare Is Waged.

The following letter is from a former lieutenant in the British cavalry, who, under the name of Stuart, accompanied one of the recent expeditions to Cuba, where he accepted a captain's commission on General Gomez's staff:

IN THE FIELD,
NEAR THE CITY OF SANTA CLARA.

TO MY DEAR FRIEND—Tomorrow promises to be a very active day for us, and as the results of war cannot be safely predicted, I have made three copies of this letter in hope that one at least may reach the friend who so kindly opened the doors for my entrance into the army of "Cuba Libre." And allow me to state here that I am proud to be on the side of liberty, fighting under the flag of the single star, which in the near future is surely destined to wave over an acknowledged and independent republic. Whatever doubt may exist in the outside world is not shared in the ranks of Gomez's army. I never saw such faith, such confidence in a military leader, in my life. Napoleon did not get more devotion from his soldiers than General Gomez receives from the men whom he is leading on to victory. Neither man nor officer in the innermost recesses of his own private communion ever dreams of questioning the judgment or the ability of this great old warrior. I tell you he is a military wonder. He is a Cuban Hannibal.

As I told you in New York, I've seen service in South Africa and in the Sudan, but for planning and carrying into execution under difficulties a successful campaign this little old man "takes the cake." Its very audacity, when you consider our comparative paucity of numbers, our scarcity of ammunition, is simply marvelous. Why, I haven't seen, all told, enough cartridges to supply a surveying party, but I am told we will pick up more in Matanzas. This present sortie is made on patriotic nerve, backed up by cane knives and good generalship.

"The rapidity with which we move keeps me all at sea. I used to occasionally ask where we were, but I've given it up now; I simply go with the crowd, putting in a shot when I get a chance, and endeavoring to direct my men toward intelligent and effective action. But in this so called guerrilla warfare but little direction is necessary. There is a degree of individual independence and responsibility to which in European warfare we are strangers. It works much better than I could believe. Don't think I mean that we are without discipline or direction. On the contrary, General Gomez's plans are most carefully conceived and his orders executed with a celerity and exactness which are inspiring. But every one of his men seems intuitively to anticipate the details of his desires. There is a certain goal, a general purpose which all seem to know and understand. Although surrounded by this peculiar individual independence, which seems strange in military operations, there is absolutely no friction. All are actuated by one impulse; there is no dissension from the controlling mind, and that belongs to Maximo Gomez. His will is absolute, and yet he says to each man: "Do not risk your life unnecessarily. You have only one and can best serve your country by saving it. Dead men cannot fire guns. Keep your head cool, your machete warm and we will yet free Cuba."

I have been with the general but a short time, but each day my admiration for him increases. He is a study in repose and in action, slender in build, not over 140 pounds in weight, about 5 feet 7 inches in height, straight as an arrow, although he is 60 years of age. His face is tanned, his hair and mustache are iron gray, his cheek bones are prominent and his chin firm. His cool, calculating eyes seem at first to absolutely measure you, and then the face breaks into a reassuring smile. His knee is stiff from a wound received in the last war, but in the saddle he is simply a part of the horse, or, rather, the horse is part of him, for he never seems to guide it. It would do your heart good to watch the old man lead a column through the canefields and forests of Santa Clara. He is never at a loss which way to turn.

We have had a fight every day since we commenced our march westward from the Santa Clara line, but nothing seems to daunt his courage and determination. We go ahead in spite of any obstacle the Spanish troops have yet interposed. Yesterday we came on quite an extended line of the enemy's front, formed to prevent our advance. The general halted on a little elevation of ground, stood in his stirrups a moment looking ahead, and then gave an order to our advance guard, who swung off to the southwest at a slow gallop; sent some word back to Maceo, northeast, and then our own cavalry, swerving a little to the right, got the order to make a feint at the enemy's left wing. The feint succeeded; the Spaniards immediately commenced to concentrate their troops in a little valley where they thought we would cross. I had considerable trouble in restraining my men from attempting to take a battery which opened fire on us when at a distance of 400 yards. We afterward learned that it was supported by 1,800 infantry. My orders were to make the charge and then retreat to the woods about a third of a mile east. The moment my cavalry commenced to fall back, a battalion of the enemy's infantry advanced in pursuit, but a kind of stubby brush greatly impeded their movements.

They were soon winded in the bushes, and before they could get out Maceo's advance guard commenced to pour in a galling fire from the north. They were soon in retreat toward their main body, and my boys hurried them along a little with close range shots from our revolvers. But ammunition is too precious to waste on retreating troops, so we made a detour to the southward and took up our original line of march west. Gen. Gomez with the main body of our troops had in the meantime pressed on ahead almost unnoticed and unmolested. We caught up with him at 3 o'clock in the afternoon. I learned tonight that Maceo's men worried the Spaniards in the valley till nearly dark.

This is a pretty fair sample of our experiences each day, although I know things will get better as we advance into Matanzas. Our long and almost unbroken march from Santiago de Cuba to Santa Clara was interesting, although devoid of unusual incident. While I think of it allow me to make a confession. In spite of your assurances and those of the many Cuban gentlemen whose acquaintance I formed in New York there still lingered in my mind a kind of secret suspicion that I was going to meet here a motley combination of the ignorant negro and more or less savage white. You can therefore imagine the surprise and delight to find myself surrounded by men whose refinement and learning would do credit to any drawing room in Europe. Skilled physicians, engineers, lawyers, men of letters and representatives of all arts and professions are more numerous on General Gomez's staff than in any command with which I have heretofore come in contact. Kindest regards and best wishes for a happy new year. Yours for "Cuba Libre," CAPTAIN STUART.

AN OCCULT DETECTIVE.

A Clairvoyant Discovers a Thief and Causes Some Sorrow.

Mrs. Emma Whiton of Hoboken, N. J., believes that she has had a practical demonstration of the value of clairvoyancy as a means of catching thieves. The experience was an interesting one, but nevertheless surprising, as the thief for whom she was searching turned out to be somebody whom she would have preferred not to have caught.

Not long ago Mrs. Whiton missed some silver spoons and a soup ladle. One day she visited a friend and chanced to speak of the missing silver. The friend told her that there was a clairvoyant in Jersey City who had a wonderful insight, and strongly recommended her to visit this person for the purpose of learning who had stolen her property. Mrs. Whiton followed the advice and learned many things which opened her eyes. The clairvoyant gave her a description of the thief, which corresponded with her nephew, Frank Van Wart.

Mrs. Whiton asked Frank the next time she saw him if he was a believer in fortune tellers, and he answered that they sometimes prophesied with wonderful accuracy. The aunt then told him the clairvoyant's opinion of him. Frank denied the allegation, but promised to assist in a search for the spoons and was very successful. He had to pay 60 cents to redeem them. A confession and his arrest followed, but Mrs. Whiton felt sorry for her nephew and did not press the complaint.—New York Tribune.

GREAT 3 CENT ROAD.

The Pullmans Said to Be Interested In the Enterprise.

Judge F. E. Dallenbaugh of Cleveland, attorney for the Henry Everett street car syndicate, is now in Chicago.

It is understood that Mr. Everett is planning to build an immense 3 cent car system in the Illinois metropolis, and Dallenbaugh is there to look over the ground. It is also stated that the Pullmans will be with Everett in the enterprise. Mr. Everett has a 3 cent system in Detroit, and petitioned the Cleveland council for a similar franchise last night. It is also quite certain that Mr. Everett will endeavor to place 3 cent lines in Cincinnati and St. Louis.—New York Journal.

Healer Mnason Dumped.

Huntsman T. Mnason, the leader of the "angel dancers," had an exciting experience in Hackensack, N. J., the other day. While driving down Main street his horse sank in a deep hole. Mnason was thrown over the dashboard of the wagon and struck on his head and shoulders on the hard ground, but escaped without serious injury. When assistance arrived, Mnason was sitting on the horse's head, exclaiming: "The Lord be praised. Glory to God in the highest."

That Lucky Institution.

Mrs. Elizabeth G. Kelly of Chicago, who has already endowed the University of Chicago with a woman's dormitory costing $60,000, has decided to erect on the university campus a chapel to cost $100,000, to be known as the Kelly Memorial chapel, in memory of her brother. The university has no chapel building at present.

BANISHED FOR LIFE.

THE OUTCAST OF CHURCH ISLAND IN GREAT SALT LAKE.

He Has For Years Lived the Life of a Wild Man and Rarely Sees a Human Being Branded For Robbing the Dead by Order of Governor Brigham Young.

In the center of the Great Salt lake in Utah is a large body of land known as Church island. This land consists of mountains and valleys, with trees and vegetation, and has always been used as a herding ground for cattle belonging to the Mormon church. Several years ago the water on the east side of the island was shallow and cattle could be driven across easily, but now the water is deep and everything must be conveyed to and from the land in boats. A distance of about five miles covered with salt water must be gone over by canoes to get to or from the island. On this famous spot, amid millions of pelicans, sea gulls and other fowls, wanders a lonely old man, without clothing and devoid of language or any of the instincts of humanity. He was banished years ago by the Mormon church on the charge of robbing the dead.

Jean Baptiste was a Frenchman who came to Salt Lake City a young man nearly 40 years ago. He grew up among the saints, and, after marrying, was made sexton of the small cemetery. His duties were light and his remuneration correspondingly small. He resided in a little cabin on the mountain side overlooking the city, and spent his time, when not employed in the cemetery, in collecting junk and trading and trafficking with a few Jewish secondhand clothes dealers who had the hardihood to engage in business among the Mormons. A regiment of United States troops was then camped near the city, and the gentiles engaged in business were assured protection.

The little Frenchman was an avaricious man and was noticeable because of his picking up every cast away article and carrying it to his home. Old dry goods boxes, barrels, tin cans and other packing articles cast away by the soldiers were especially well cared for by Jean Baptiste, the sexton. He dressed as a scavenger and resembled the modern saloon loafer, who is always searching the slums for barrels and boxes of garbage and cast off garments. The actions of the sexton created some comment, and not a little curiosity was aroused among people who had occasion to visit his residence on the mountain side, over the city.

One day Jean appeared on the streets dressed in an elegant suit of broadcloth. A few days before a wealthy stranger had died and was buried in the cemetery. The suit in which the body was dressed resembled that worn by the sexton. An examination was ordered, and the corpse was found to have been robbed of its clothing. A committee waited upon the sexton and made a most startling discovery. The graveclothes of over 200 persons were found in the baskets and boxes stowed away in his ghoulish cabin. Excitement ran high in Salt Lake City. The boxes of clothing were emptied and the contents taken to the city hall, where many a fond mother identified the burial robes of her child. Elegant silk dresses, at that time a luxury even to the rich, were found in the various bundles. The man was arrested and cast into jail, pursued by a mob who sought his life.

Brigham Young, then governor and general dictator in Utah, ordered the man to be branded with a hot iron and banished to Church island. During the quiet hour of midnight Jean Baptiste was taken from the jail, and his whole forehead was seared with the following inscription: "Branded For Robbing the Dead." Two men escorted the quivering, naked form from the city of vengeance. A canoe was entered near the city, and the doomed prisoner was taken in chains to the island which in future was to be his home. Without clothing or food he was landed upon the shore, the boat returned to the mainland, and the ghoul remained a hopeless exile. He could not leave the island, because instant death would follow should he be seen by any of the inhabitants of the Mormon land of Zion. He was forced to seek food and shelter amid wild animals, the birds and reptiles.

The island was soon known as the land of banishment. People shunned its shores as they would a haunted house. Many persons were lost upon the lake while rowing in canoes against heavy winds. The general supposition of all was that those unfortunates drifted to the island and were devoured by the wild man. Even the fearless cowboy has ever refused to intrude upon the home land of the exile. Wild horses roam over its acres of broken canyons, rugged cliffs and grassy meadows. The sea gulls and other birds find a home undisturbed on the deserted shores. All the natives, including Indians, warn newcomers of the fate of scores of pleasure seekers who have been drifted upon the shores of the fated island. The crags, bluffs, dark caverns and lonely canyons warn every boatman nearing the shore to keep away from the hidden dangers.

In a dark cave about half a mile from the shore lives the wild man. His home is strewn with the wrecks of boats, bones of victims and other cannibalistic indications. Away back in the deep darkness of the cavern is his sleeping place, made of clothing stripped from unfortunate victims shipwrecked on the fatal shore. A collection of leaves, grasses and branches from the trees of the island forms the foundation for the bed, in which this human monster spends most of his time. Several hunters and explorers have recently viewed the man. He is described as old, stooping, destitute of clothing, incapable of speech and covered with long hair. Upon the appearance of man he utters a wild, weird shriek and rushes to the cavern, from which he cannot be induced or forced to return.—San Francisco Examiner.

PREACHER'S QUEER PET.

Shaggy Wolf Is a Regular Attendant at a New York City Church.

A wolf has crept into the fold of the John Hass Presbyterian Church, on East Seventy-fourth street, New York. It has not come in sheep's clothing, but in a dark, shaggy coat. It presence in the flock does not seem to occasion the least anxiety; in fact, it has become a universal pet and a favorite with all. The wolf is the pet of Rev. Vincent Pisek, pastor of the church. This peculiar pet was born on a Western prairie, but when he was a very small whelp, and before he had grown fierce enough to be dangerous, he was captured and transported to the quiet church parsonage. Since then the religious influences of his surroundings have completely converted him. He has put away nearly all wolfish things, and at the present day is leading a quiet, exemplary life, and often attends both the church and Sunday school. It is said he sleeps through the sermons.

The wolf was born a heathen. Both of his parents lived and died on the open prairie. Mr. Pisek, while on a hunting trip in the West, shot the parents of Mr. Wolf and captured their cub. He brought the little orphan home with him, and a new life at once began for him. He was given a milk diet, which agreed with him very well, and it time it began to influence his character. Instead of growing up to be snarling and ferocious, his manners became mild and gentle. He soon became accustomed to his civilized home, and enjoyed the rich carpets he walked upon and the warm blankets he slept in every night. Mr. Pisek, in bringing up the wolf in his fold, has been very careful to keep his young charge out of bad company.

In the summer time Mr. Wolf changes his residence to his master's summer home at Lake Hopatcong. This move is always very welcome to Mr. Wolf. He is allowed to run at large about the woods. As a result, however, he is constantly meeting very curious adventures. The pet wolf has often caused great consternation by appearing suddenly before picnic parties or parties alone in the woods. The appearance of his sharp little nose has often broken up a party and caused them to run wildly from him, although his intentions were undoubtedly friendly. On one occasion two girls who were rowing on the lake spied Mr. Wolf on shore and were afraid to land for several hours for fear of encountering the supposedly ferocious animal, which followed them along the bank to play with them.

the engines. The gauge is less than two feet, the cylinders are 5x10 inches, the drivers 24 inches diameter, and the water tank holds 90 gallons. If this was the standard-sized engine in this country hardware stores would keep them, same as they do sausage-cutters. Railroad managers would order them by the gross, and locomotive engineers would be thicker than fleas in a dog kennel.—Locomotive Engineer.

A Queen and Mother.

To the English people who know and understand how the daughters and granddaughters of the Queen have been brought up and trained it will not be surprising news that the Czarina has determined to nurse her little baby herself. Her own mother, Princess Alice, like all her sisters, washed and dressed and nursed her babies; the Duchess of Fife has done the same, and the Czarina is only obeying her English as well as her natural mother instincts in declining to have a wet nurse for her infant. Nothing, perhaps, that she could have done will so endear her to the Russian people as this act, which seems perfectly natural to us. No previous empress has ever nursed her children, and the Russians will regard what they take to be an exceptional evidence of devotion to the tiny Grand Duchess as a proof of the Czarina's wish to cherish for them their possible future Empress.—Gentlewoman.

SHE IS A NANCY SIKES

ALTHOUGH YOUNG AND BEAUTIFUL SHE WAS LIVING WITH THIEVES.

New York Police Unearth a Gang of Robbers In a Squalid Den—Find Pretty Mrs. Annie Beck In Charge—Says She Is a Police Captain's Niece.

Five burglars and all round crooks, whose record of crime is scarcely less repulsive than their general appearance, were held in $1,500 each in Harlem police court, New York, the other day.

Seated in the body of the court was an extremely pretty young girl, elegantly attired and of refined speech and manners. She looked like a young society beauty who had drifted into that clearing house of crime and seemed entirely out of place amid the tough and vicious surroundings. Yet she claimed to be the wife of the leader of the gang, a hideous little creature, seemingly of Chinese origin, curiously resembling the notorious George Appo, and she was known to have acted as a modern Nancy Sikes to these New York prototypes of the Artful Dodger, Charley Bates and other graduates of old Fagin's school.

Early the other morning N. Levin's clothing store was entered, and $150 worth of goods were stolen. The burglars had obtained access to a cellar beneath the store, and after erecting a scaffold of planks they had bored through the floor until a hole large enough to creep through had been made. Overcoats and other articles were taken, also the proprietor's hat, an old and broken one being left in its place.

Detectives Grady and Powell obtained a clew which led them to 328 East Seventy-seventh street. Here is a large flathouse, the basement of which is not occupied. Groping their way through this basement in the darkness, at the rear they found a perfect rookery of squalor and vice, presided over by the beautiful houri eyed girl of 18 or 20, who claimed to be the wife of the leader of the gang, an ex-convict named Maurice Beck.

The pair were found together in a small room containing only one bed and very little furniture. They were arrested on suspicion and admitted that the room was also occupied by Dan Murphy, aged 21; Tom Bluson, aged 29; John McGrath, aged 20, and Jim Hart of the same age.

Annie Beck, the modest, reserved, ladylike girl, told the officers where much of the stolen property had been pawned, and she was set at liberty, while her supposed husband was taken to the police station. She remained in the room with the officers, awaiting the return of the rest of the gang, who, she explained, were probably paying a professional visit to some store in the neighborhood.

The woman told the detectives the signals which would herald their return, and at 3 o'clock in the morning they arrived, making a peculiar scratching noise on the door. As soon as the door was opened they were seized, and a lively struggle ensued, during which pretty Annie sat coolly and calmly on the bed. Pistols had to be drawn before they capitulated, when they were found in possession of jimmies, chisels, bits and a full burglars' outfit. One of them wore the identical hat belonging to Mr. Levin.

No pawn tickets were discovered, but the stolen clothing was found to have been pawned exactly as described by pretty Annie.

The five crooks were taken to police headquarters, and all were identified as ex-convicts of the worst character. Benson returned only three months ago from serving five years for trading in counterfeit bills.

Annie Beck obtained an order to see her husband from the commissioner of correction and patiently awaited an opportunity to speak with the ill favored little crook, whom she avows she loves dearly. She was perfectly willing to talk of him and his accomplices in crime, and she spoke in the polished English of a thoroughly educated girl.

"Maurice is not so bad," she said, "and, although we courted for three years and have been legally married four months, I never knew him to be in trouble before. You may rely upon my word that he had no hand in that robbery, although the young men with whom he associates were probably concerned.

"That man Benson is at the bottom of all this trouble, and, of course I was aware that he had recently been in state prison, but what could I do? I was powerless to prevent their misdeeds.

"Yes, I gave the officers the signals and assisted them as far as I could. I am sure they will find that my Maurice is innocent.

"I would wish it to be understood that there can be no scandal attaching to me and these other men. I am legally married to Maurice. I love him with all my heart, and I have always been true to him.

"I cannot tell you my maiden name, as that would bring disgrace upon my family, who are well known and respected, and the disgrace of this would kill them. My uncle is a police captain, and I have lived all my life in Yorkville, where I was born."

When asked how it was that she was found consorting with a gang of thieves in a squalid and filthy hovel, she smiled sweetly, revealing the most perfect little teeth, and said:

"Well, I loved my husband, you know. Of course I knew he used to run a policy game, but that made no difference. My people are well off, and he could have the best counsel in the city if I chose to let them know of our trouble, but I cannot do that.

"Oh! Do you think they will let me see him, if only for a moment?" Her big black eyes had such a bewitchingly pleading expression that it is small wonder she had her wish immediately after the magistrate had disposed of the case.—New York Journal.

Showing Cents Instead of Eagles.

Nearly all the money changers down town have stopped displaying gold in their show windows, and in place of it have great piles of new copper pennies.

Up to a year or so ago the changers vied with one another in displaying gold coin. Sometimes there would be as much as $7,000 or $8,000 in a window, and there was usually a crowd around looking at it.

About a year ago a thief in one of these crowds smashed a window and made off with a double handful of gold. Then the police asked the money changers to take better means to protect their windows.

Some of them put up wire screens. Others put up iron bars. Both interfered with the view of the gold.

Who originated the new funny idea is not known, but it has taken hold generally. The pennies, when they came from the mint, have about the color of an American gold coin. They are piled in the windows, Indian head up.

There is nothing on that side of a cent to tell what it is, and no doubt a great many foreign patrons of these places who are not familiar with our coin think them gold.

Some of the changers have empty treasury bags in the windows beside the pennies. The bags are marked $15,000 or $20,000 or some other large amount. —New York Sun.

Took Pride In It.

One day the home of Geoffroy St. Hilaire, the famous French naturalist, became a perfect pandemonium. Every room was turned upside down, except the study of the master of the house. Mme. St. Hilaire had lost a very valuable diamond necklace, but she instructed the servants not to mention the loss to her husband, lest the knowledge of it should disturb him in his work. Moreover, the missing bauble could not be there, inasmuch as she rarely entered that sanctum. The search proved in vain, but the great savant was still left in ignorance. A few days later, at Mme. St. Hilaire's weekly "at home," one of her female friends sympathetically inquired after the ornament in the hearing of her host. In the most airy but withal most unaffected way, the great naturalist remarked that his favorite baboon had been playing for nearly a week with a "similar thing to that described," which "similar thing" turned out to be the priceless ornament. Mme. St. Hilaire indignantly protested at M. St. Hilaire's neglect in not having taken the necklace from the animal. "I thought that it belonged to him," was the calm reply," he seemed to take such pride in it."—San Francisco Argonaut.

An Absentminded Customer.

You recall the old story of Lamar, who was so forgetful and ridden by abstraction that once, getting into a horse car, he dropped a 50 cent piece into the fare box and then sat contentedly down to read. The driver felt a natural horror at the proceeding, as he could not make change for money once it was in the box. He stuck his head in the door and hailed the supreme judge reproachfully. "You don't oughter put a 50 cent piece in the box," he said. "That's dead wrong. You ought to put in a nickel." Lamar was much stricken of conscience at the fault thus found with him, and, hastening to repair the wrong he had done, hustled out a nickel and put that in the box along with the 50 cent piece. At this the driver looked at him with an air of knowing sympathy, and, tapping his forehead significantly, shut the door and said no more, while Lamar went on with his reading. —Washington Post.

A Watermelon Story.

A group of friends were telling stories at a reception the other evening, when one of the guests related the following incident, that is without parallel:

"I was in Georgia, near Barnesville, last spring," she said, "and to me a watermelon field in full bloom is one of the prettiest things I ever saw. I went out into the field and picked some of the blossoms. When I returned to the house a ring that was highly prized, but a little loose on my finger, was gone. We searched everywhere, but could not find it. Last summer I bought a watermelon at the Centre market, and when I cut it the knife struck something hard at the end of the melon. Investigation revealed that it was my lost ring. It had dropped in the center of a bloom, and the melon had formed around it."—Philadelphia Times.

The Popular Bicycle.

Prospects of even greater popularity for the bicycle are pleasant. It means prosperity as showing folks getting on well or better off.—Philadelphia Times.

Temporarily.

"Will you be mine?" he timidly said,
And the maiden replied, "Until we are wed."
"And after that?" "After that," said she,
"You, of course, will belong to me."
—Indianapolis Journal.

Polite Policeman.

The Boston Herald tells of a brave policeman who is especially attentive to the wants of little women who want to cross the streets. It is seldom that kindness makes an error, but in this case the policeman's good natured helpfulness was mistaken.

The pleasant weather had brought out a crowd of shoppers, and among them was a pretty little woman who seemed to be in terror of moving across the street.

She stood on the corner and gazed at the passing throng, unmindful of the many admiring glances cast at her. A car passed the crossing, and was closely followed by another. Then she ran into the street, and the policeman saw her just as she left the sidewalk.

The second car was coming along under right of way, when the officer raised his hand and seized the little woman by the arm. She was so slight that he almost lifted her out of the way of the car and dashed in front of a team on the other side, landing her safely on the opposite sidewalk.

"There, you're all right," he said as she stepped upon the walk and turned to face him.

She shook out her ruffles, straightened her hat, and smiled sweetly at him as she replied:

"Yes, I'm all right, but I ran out to take that first car. I didn't want to come over here. Now, will you please escort me across?"

Hedging.

It is thoughtlessly said that man blows women, but it is not so. It may be not done as a public, or even a social, act. On such occasions man is only in a responsive and not an initiative capacity.

To produce a blow only two things are necessary, and man, except by the most precious, has nothing to do with its origin. The first condition is an opportunity, and the second is the desire existing, though unexpressed, in the woman's own mind to be blown.

When these conditions are present, there is sure to be some blowing, for the woman will, in a dozen ways that cannot be counted, convey the idea to the man, and he, if he has any chivalry in his nature, will respond to her wish. Therefore in all cases of true blowing, it is the woman who blows, and not the man, who simply responds to a prompting and intuition that he cannot resist. The power of blow is a woman's, and if it is not put out there will not be any blowing.—Norman's Weekly.

Some of the Sharpers.

Some of our well known men built up the marvelous stories of early visits to apparently unnatural methods of sharp business, for example, one man who made a week's visit to Europe, and brought up a new discovery. The last man was found in this city who had actually 40 winks at a time. Dr. Joseph Hawkins, who has 30 years of his life in a trance, has lately called sleep nowhere else. W. J. Arkell brings a wake from Friday morning till Friday night, then goes to Canada to sleep and sleeps for two days. Dr. Depew has lately discovered the lost art of taking a siesta and finds it exhilarating. Webster could never stay awake later than 9 o'clock. Many a time he was caught standing behind the door fast asleep. His head grew an eighth of an inch a year, and the increasing weight of brain made him sleepy.—New York Press.

Drawing the Line.

Many years ago the minister of Perlee, in Aberdeenshire, was Benjamin Mercer, a man of great bodily strength and of great eccentricity of habits. One day as he was preaching a man in the congregation fell very sound asleep. Still Mr. Mercer took no notice of him until he began to snore, and then called to the beadle, "Charlie, wauken uplandy. Much; he's sittin i' the corner o' that square seat snorin." The beadle was quick to act, and sharply awakened in a hurried and excited manner, whereupon the minister addressed him: "Sandy, I'm nae freely sae hard upon sleepers i' the kirk as some folk, because the preacher is sometimes as much to blame as the hearer, but"—and he held out his clenched fist threateningly—"hut, Sandy, I dear snorin."—London Telegraph.

BORN.

LANE—At Fish Spring, April 11, 1896, to Mr. and Mrs James Lane, a daughter.

DIED.

BELL—At San Francisco, April 14, 1896, Mrs. James Bell of Sonora, a native of Michigan,, aged 48 years

Mrs. A. R. Brown arrived from Bishop last Monday.

Marshall Naylor returned from Big Pine Wednesday.

The telegraph line is again running between Independence and the Station.

Mrs. Max Gransberger of San Francisco is visiting her sister, Mrs. F. Rhine.

Tickets to the Grand Ball in the Pavilion on the 27th of this month will be $1.50.

Fuller & Malone, the Fish Spring miners, spent last Sunday and Monday in town.

Sheriff Given is making active preparation to collect the sheep license this year.

A small fire on the Schalton ranch in the big wind Tuesday was quickly extinguished.

J. J. Gunn and his brother, Thos. Gunn came up from Mojave Tuesday, returning to-day.

Miss Agnes Chalfant of Bishop is visiting with Miss Lena Thompson of Camp Independence.

Arthur and Paul Mairs went to Los Angeles with Fred Hobart when he took his band of cattle.

W. T. Grant came in from the southern end of the county Wednesday and is spending a few days in town.

A number of cattle have been drowned lately in the ditch above town, five cows and a dog being drowned in one day.

Mrs. G. W. Rives arrived from Southern California yesterday. She has been teaching music in Los Angeles for the past two months and returns to that city next week.

Last Tuesday morning when the wind was howling its wildest a fire broke out on the Sanger ranch near Big Pine and burned half a dozen feed racks. Word was sent over to town for help but the fire was extinguished before any further damage was done. It is believed that the fire originated by a spark from the engine.

The old Maxim Mill on the east side of the river was burned during the first part of the week. No one was near at the time, and the origin of the fire has not been ascertained. All that remained was discovered when the train came down the Valley Wednesday afternoon. The property was owned by Mrs. F. Rhine of this place and was not insured. As we go to press we learn that it was the Chrysopolis mill that burned, and not the Maxim.

From Aberdeen.

Miss Doss' house was completely wrecked by the wind storm on Tuesday.

John Martinta has had a neat little house erected on his claim south west of Chas. Walters'.

The Railroad Company has erected a platform at the Station which will be a great convenience for those who have freight to load or unload.

During the terrific wind storm that prevailed last Tuesday our new school house was moved about six feet from its foundation and otherwise damaged. It will be impossible to hold school therein until it is repaired.

Capt. Lake Smith and W. B. Moore are preparing to take a trip to Bonie with provisions soon. They contemplate being gone all summer.

CHASED BY A TIN BUG.

An Unfortunate Woman in Broadway, New York.

Among the soul-terrifying mechanical toys which infest the pavements of lower Broadway, none is so distressing as the green beetle, which is a favorite among the fakirs in that locality.

One might look for straightforwardness in a bug whose entire powers of locomotion are included in a spool and an elastic band wound up tight, but somewhere in this simple combination lurks possibilities of diabolical ingenuity. A few twists of the fakir's fingers and the bug is ready for business. At first he trundles along at a good pace, evincing a disposition to shape his course on circular lines; but let a crusty-looking man or a timid-looking woman draw near and all that is most devilish in the spool, which passes for the beetle,'s heart, comes to the surface. The bug slows down as if there were hardly an iota of motion left in it until the victim is within easy reach when it darts forward and gets the unfortunate passerby into a state of distraction by rattling about under his or her feet. One of these bugs chased a woman up on the stone coping that bounds Trinity churchyard the other day, and tried to climb upafter her while she clung to the railing and screamed:

"Take it away! Oh, somebody chase it away!"

"It ain't nothin' but tin, lady," said the fakir who owned the beetle. "It ain't agoin' to hurt yer none. Buy one to take home to the children."

"I won't move a step till you hold it," insisted the woman. "I don't care what it's made of. It chased me. Take it away!"

And the fakir had to hold his tin creature down to the sidewalk while the terrified woman braved the perils of a crowded crossing and reached the other side of the street.—New York Sun.

Oil and Water.

"I'm very unfortunate," said the young artist.

"You are deficient in one important quality," replied his candid friend.

"What is that?"

"Tact. When Mr. Greesem came to see you about a portrait, you never stopped to think that he made his fortune out of a lucky streak in kerosene."

"Never."

"And you told him he ought to have his picture done in oil, and he didn't leave the order."

"That's so."

"And when Mr. Skimker, who has prospered as a dairyman, called at your studio, you rushed from Scylla to Charybdis and advised him to be done up in water colors. You're a good painter, my boy, but what you need is discretion."—Washington Star.

An Exciting Crap Game.

One of the notable features of a not otherwise interesting crap game down in Flemingsburg, Ky., the other day was that after it was all over the doctors removed three flattened pistol bullets from under the scalp of one of the negro players. Aside from the slight punctures in his scalp the man was uninjured. The bullets had not even dented his skull. Of the other players, one was badly slashed with a razor, another had a pistol bullet in his thigh, another had a bullet in his arm, and another had a bullet in his hip.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Imitation Furs.

After the furrier, chemist and dyer have got through with the rabbit skin it may be a sealskin, a sable, an otter, a Siberian squirrel, a mink, a marten, a beaver or any other fashionable fur. The transformation takes place in the shops which sell felt to hatmakers, carpet weavers and felt manufacturers, and Paris and London are the principal centers for this industry. In those cities millions of rabbit skins are dressed and treated, and the bogus furs are sent out to robe men and women of all parts of the world.

Rabbit skins are not the only pelts which are transformed into furs that bear the names of animals living in ice and snow. Monkeys from Africa and South America send their skins to the furrier to be made into fine raiment. Cats are skinned to supply the demand for sealskins and beaver. The shaggy curls of the Newfoundland dog are made into buffalo robes, and the skins of fox tailed squirrels are sold as imitations of rare furs.

The United States buys more imitation furs than any other country, and millions of them are sent to China to line the mantles and robes of mandarins. Large numbers of rabbit and cat skins are treated and dyed in this country, but the French furrier has the credit of producing the best imitations.

The furrier's trade is not a healthy one, for the dust and short hairs which are beaten out of the skins fill the lungs and thus shorten the lives of many workmen. This is not the case, however, with American furriers, for machinery and improved appliances used in this country and better ventilation serve to keep the air of the workshops comparatively free from the injurious dust. In making fur clothing many skins are sewed together, and the workman not only must have the skill necessary to conceal the seams, but must be able to perfectly match the several skins.—Chicago Record.

Theatrical Managers Today.

A vast and disproportionate army of theatrical managers, men whose darling desire it is to see their names in 2 by 4 letters and their faces in five colors on the advertising boards, has sprung up by the opportunity afforded for the exercise of the art of getting something for nothing. By imperceptible degrees the position of the actor has been entirely changed. Once he was a person who possessed a certain power and was entitled to a certain consideration. He knew how to act and what was necessary toward the making of a good play. His opinion was deferred to and his judgment sought. The commercial prosperity of the old time "agent" has, however, made that member arrogant in these regards, and he now no longer defers to the experience of the man who plays. The latter must conform his conduct to the direction of the box office man, and much and great is the dissatisfaction resulting from this reversal of function. Not the least important of the dissatisfied parties is the public. It sees, without knowing why, that there is something wrong with both actor and play, and it naturally blames the actor. He is the one responsible to it. No agent can represent the actor in his work.

If the actor is blameworthy for helping to break down the rational organization of the theater, the manager is equally so for thrusting himself into the actor's place and presuming to dictate how and what plays shall be performed. Does it not always happen that the pleasing power of any given play or set of plays is referred solely to the actors, and do they not eventually become the actual controllers of the theater, no matter how assiduously the agent of their work tries to keep his name in print as the head of "my theater" or of "my company?"—Forum.

English In French Canada.

There is a Canadian dialect of French, usually called the French-Canadian patois by patronizing people who know little or no French, though such authorities as Mr. Ferchette and Mr. William Maclennan declare, I believe, that it is much purer French than is spoken by the "common people" in France. But when you reflect on the so called French-Canadian dialect of English you will perceive that it is not a dialect, but simply broken English, varying as to correctness according to the acquaintance of the individual with a language which is not his mother tongue.

A dialect of English such as the Scotch or Irish or Yankee or that of the Tennessee mountaineers is, I take it, some well established form of the language common to a multitude of people bred similarly and mostly living in one district. It is a local language, varied little in its usage by those nurtured in it. But French-Canadian English varies with almost every user. Its degrees of correctness range between the exquisite literary English slightly modulated by French tones that is spoken by such finished orators as Mr. Laurier or Mr. Chapleau and the scarcely intelligible English of a habitant beginning to practice in the foreign tongue. Here is no local fixed form of English; here is no dialect; here is nothing but a great variety of cases of broken English in some of which the language is spoken with perfect facility. What the story writer in or the reporter of French-Canadian English must do is to choose the case that he will represent or report, and his choice will of course be determined by the literary purpose that he entertains.—New York Post.

Cloth Made From Peat.

Peat fiber can be bleached to snowy whiteness and will dye any color. One of the great advantages of cloth made from peat fiber is that it is entirely antiseptic and possesses properties which render it inimical to parasitical organism. In appearance the finer makes are quite equal to the best tweeds and closely resemble the camel's hair cloth.

GOTHAM PEDAGOGY.

THE LIFE AND DUTIES OF A NEW YORK SCHOOLTEACHER.

Good Pay, Short Days and Lots of Vacation—Advantages Over Other Occupations—Male Teachers Have Wider Opportunities Than the Women.

Everything taken into consideration, there are few public offices in the city of New York which are more desirable than those within the public school system. From almost every point of view the life of a schoolteacher is a desirable one in this city. The pay is good, the promotion tolerably rapid, the work not onerous, and the hours are better than in almost any other field of labor. About 4,000 teachers are employed in the public school system of New York whose salaries range from $600 to $1,900 a year for women, and from $1,080 to $3,000 for men. But $3,000 is by no means the limit to the financial ambition of a New York schoolteacher. On the part of the men there are several greater prizes within their reach if they have the proper qualifications and can secure the right influence in the board of education. For instance, there is the office of assistant superintendent of public schools, of which there are ten, each drawing a salary of about $4,000 a year. Then there is the superintendent's office itself, with its handsome pay of $7,000, and it has been the goal toward which scores of educators in this and other cities are constantly keeping their eyes. Both the offices of assistant superintendent and superintendent are filled absolutely by the board of education. The assistant superintendent is elected for two years, and, as a matter of practice, has a life position. Then the male teachers can look forward to a promotion to the City college either as an instructor at a salary of $2,500, or a full fledged professor at $4,500.

There are few of the 53 male principals in New York's public schools, however, who do not get more than their salary of $3,000 a year. Almost every one of them gets some little additional pay, as $500 or $800 a year for extra service as an instructor in the evening schools or as clerks of the ward board of school trustees. Some of the principals hold both of these little plums and make a clear $4,000 a year out of the school system. The principals of boys' schools, of course, have their pick in these choice perquisites, but there are so many additional offices to be filled that under male teachers in the public schools come in for a good round share.

The four evening high schools alone give employment to 20 or 30 teachers, each of whom gets anywhere from $3 to $6 a night for the additional work. Then there are some 23 boards of school trustees, each of which has its clerk, who gets pay for the amount of work done, the average mounting up to $400 or $500 a year. Nearly all these clerks are principals of some schools.

In the case of women schoolteachers the chances for earning extras are very limited. The maximum salary she can get is $1,900. She starts into the system with a salary of about $600, which is gradually raised until she becomes the principal of a girl's department of a grammar school.

In order to become a schoolteacher in the public schools of New York it is first necessary to get a recommendation from a member of the board of education. This enables the candidate to try a preliminary examination, which, if he is successful, entitles him to be placed upon the eligible list of teachers. After satisfactory work in this capacity for not more than a year the candidate secures a permanent license as a teacher in New York's public schools, and as such is entitled to teach in any part of the city.

This does not mean necessarily that the teacher will immediately find employment. That depends entirely upon the local board of school trustees. The city is divided into 24 school districts, the schools in each of which are controlled by a school board, who are appointed by the board of education. The boards have the selection of all teachers below the grade of principal, these being appointed by the board of education. As a rule, however, the licensed teacher soon finds an opening and then is in the regular line of promotion.

What has made the school service so attractive to many are the easy hours. Nine-tenths of the salary earners in New York get to work at 8 a. m. and are lucky if they get away by 5 p. m., with half an hour for luncheon. The work of the teacher begins at 9 a. m. and is over, as a rule, by 3 p. m., with an hour for luncheon. Nine-tenths of the salary earners get only 2 weeks out of the 52 in the year for a vacation, and they work 6 days in the week at that. The schoolteachers get a vacation of 15 weeks in 52 and draw full pay during that time. Besides this they work only 5 days in the week and have all holidays. It has been estimated that the schoolteachers of New York work less than 200 of the 365 days in the year.

If a schoolteacher is to rise in the calling, however, the work does not end with school hours. Studies in pedagogy and advanced education must be kept up at home. The work is not so hard, however, or the pay so poor as to induce many to resign. In fact, it has become a saying in the system that "schoolteachers never die and never resign."—New York Tribune.

A Health Palmist.

Mrs. St. Hill is a woman who has made of palmistry something more than a means of amusing an idle crowd or frightening a credulous one. She has studied it with reference to its medical side and has proved the connection between brain and hand. The London hospitals, asylums for idiots and the blind—yes, even Hanwell—all have opened their doors to her. From wax impressions made of the hands of the inmates she has learned that each disease brings its own sign on the hand.—London Letter.

Just Like a Man For All the World.

The mighty feminine mind is nowhere more resplendent than in the elaboration of cooking recipes. "Bake a duck 40 minutes," says the lady cooking teacher. If the clumsy masculine intellect were preparing the recipe, undoubtedly it would say bake 40 minutes in an oven heated to a given temperature. The lady teacher, however, with sublime faith in the intuitional faculty of the cook, says merely bake so long, whether the oven be redhot or nearly cold.—Amsterdam (N. Y.) Democrat.

LEANING TOWER IN RUINS.

For One Day This 225-Foot Steel Shaft Resembled Pisa's Pride.

The last vestige of the great midwinter fair at San Francisco was removed recently when the tall tower on which the great searchlight was placed was pulled down after several days of hard labor. Dynamite was tried on the foundations at first without success. Enormous cables wound on windlasses were attached to the framework and pulled, while twelve blasts were fired in the four ten-foot cubes of cement that formed the foundation stones. With all that energy the tower only leaned a little to one side, and for thirty-six hours San Francisco had a leaning tower of Pisa. The number of blasts was doubled, more cables were attached, and at last in one long, grand pull, aided by twenty-four thundering explosions, the 225 foot shaft of steel toppled slowly over, bent and twisted into fantastic shapes. The iron was then broken up for junk.

The electric tower was a white elephant to the men who invested money in it. It did not come anywhere near paying for its construction. The company became involved in financial difficulties, it is said, and when the managers learned that it would cost more to take the thing down than it would bring chopped into pieces they decided to allow the Park Commissioners to get rid of it. The tower stood in the way of a grand concourse that is being laid out. This driveway runs through the park in which the midwinter fair was located.

Measure Your Friends.

"Did you ever amuse yourself," asks the London Gentlewoman, "on a wet Sunday afternoon by giving marks of appreciation or the reverse to all your friends and acquaintances? This is the method we employ: There are five heads—1, looks; 2, manners; 3, abilities; 4, merit, and 5, 'use'—and this fifth item often balances all the rest, for a person may quite likely possess nearly full marks for looks, manners, abilities and merit and yet be of no possible 'use' to oneself, while, vice versa, some person may be of great use, one may fancy their company, or they may have a knack of sympathy, yet be very deficient in manners or merit. The marks range from 0 to 20, and if you are quite conscientious in awarding your marks you will be surprised to find how the law of averages comes in, and how much the sum total of one individual's marks resembles another."

WHY NOT.

It is said that if we take care of little things, the big things will take care of themselves. But why can't we be always prepared for many of our little troubles. What's the use of suffering days and weeks, when in ten minutes we can get rid of the pain. A sudden attack of backache, toothache, or neuralgic headache, finds the most of us without anything at hand, while St. Jacobs Oil would cure and put an end to the trouble promptly.

The Boy—Say, Maria, let's play we're father and mother. The Girl—All right; you begin. The Boy—Oh, would that I had never been married!

STOP, THIEF!

Stop a small malady, which is stealing your strength, before it outruns your power to arrest it, and recover what it took from you. The surest and prompiest recuperator of waning vitality is Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which restores vigor, flesh and nerve quietude because it restores activity to those functions whose interruption interferes with general health. Use the Bitters for dyspepsia, malarial, rheumatic and kidney complaints and biliousness.

Now doth the busy Congressman

Spring Medicine

Your blood in Spring is almost certain to be full of impurities—the accumulation of the winter months. Bad ventilation of sleeping rooms, impure air in dwellings, factories and shops, overeating, heavy, improper foods, failure of the kidneys and liver properly to do extra work thus thrust upon them, are the prime causes of this condition. It is of the utmost importance that you

Purify Your Blood

Now, as when warmer weather comes and the tonic effect of cold bracing air is gone, your weak, thin, impure blood will not furnish necessary strength. That tired feeling, loss of appetite, will open the way for serious disease, ruined health, or breaking out of humors and impurities. To make pure, rich, red blood Hood's Sarsaparilla stands unequalled. Thousands testify to its merits. Millions take it as their Spring Medicine. Get Hood's, because

FOR MARCH, APRIL AND MAY!

Paine's Celery Compound the Best Spring Remedy To-day in All the World.

It Purifies the Blood as Nothing Else Can Do--It is Food for the Tired Brain--It Makes Strong Nerves.

Publicly Recommended as No Remedy of Any Kind Ever Was Before by Thousands Whom It Has Made Well.

Endorsed and Prescribed by the Ablest Physicians in Every City in America.

Where every other remedy has failed Paine's celery compound has made people well!

It cures disease! It has saved the lives of thousands of sufferers. It has made the weak strong.

Paine's celery compound purifies the blood as nothing else can do: it is nature's brain food; it builds up the shattered nerves; it is preeminently the one great health-maker known to medicine.

First discovered after laborious, studious, scientific research by the ablest physician America has produced, Prof. Edward E. Phelps, M. D., LL.D., of Dartmouth College, it is prescribed and publicly indorsed by the best practitioners in every city of America. It has been so enthusiastically recommended by grateful men and women in every walk of life that it is to-day in every sense the most popular remedy in the world.

It has proven itself so easily the greatest of all spring medicines, making the weak strong and the infirm well, that in the big cities, New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, Boston, St. Louis and the rest, the leading newspapers, making their own canvasses again this year, have found that the demand for Paine's celery compound as far surpasses that of all other remedies as the curative power of this great compound surpasses that of all others together!

Paine's celery compound, taken during the early spring days, has even more than its usual remarkable efficacy in making people well. It makes short work of all diseases of debility and nervous exhaustion. It rapidly drives out neuralgia, sleeplessness, dyspepsia and rheumatism from the system. It removes that lassitude, or "tired feeling," which betokens weakened nerves and poor blood.

Overworked and tired women are but one class of persons who are in urgent need of this wonderful remedy to make and keep them well. Business men who are not sleeping soundly, shop girls made pale and sickly by long hours of indoor work, and the countless sufferers from dyspepsia, kidney and liver trouble, need the invigorating effect of Paine's celery compound now that spring with all its dangers, is at hand. Its preeminence as a health-maker comes from its extraordinary powers of supplying appropriate nutriment to the blood, nerves and brain.

Just as the great lawyer studies each one of his cases till he knows it on every side, and in every possible aspect, so Prof. Edward E. Phelps, M. D., LL. D., of Dartmouth College, the discoverer of Paine's celery compound, has studied the nerves in health and disease, when well nourished and when under nourished, in men and women and children years before he looked for the remedy. Paine's celery compound was the outcome of his entire professional life. A fitting memorial to a life of hard study and close observation—a remedy that the world could not lose to-day, at any price.

Take advantage of the remarkable power of this greatest of all remedies for restoring vigor to the blood and strength to the nervous system. In these first days of spring one has every chance for getting well. Don't neglect it.

Paine's celery compound calms and equalizes all the nervous tissues and induces the body to take on solid flesh. It purifies the blood, as is so clearly shown by the rapid clearing of the skin of all evidences of bad humors within. It is an infallible relief for salt rheum, eczema and all blood diseases.

Physicians recognize Paine's celery compound as the one scientific spring remedy, and it is universally prescribed by them wherever there is great need of a vigorous and prompt restoring of health and strength to the worn-out system.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

THE SWEETEST THING.

La mode has ne'er meant much to men.
Not closely do I con its Vagaries, but I vow I've seen
The sweetest thing in bonnets.

Describe it? Ah, that calls for what I haven't—genius! Dimming
The roses round it, 'twas beyond
My poor pen's power of limning.

Such form and color! Titian's brush
At best could never show 'em.
Then why should I essay in words
A picture and a poem?

Yet, for the milliner, among
My memories no place is!
The sweetest thing in bonnets now?
Why, Dolly's flowerlike face is!

KIDNAPED.

We are a high caste and enlightened race, and infant marriage is very shocking and the consequences are sometimes peculiar, but, nevertheless, the Hindoo notion—which is the continental notion, which is the aboriginal notion—of arranging marriages irrespective of the personal inclinations of the married is sound. Think for a minute, and you will see that it must be so; unless, of course, you believe in "affinities"—in which case you had better not read this tale. How can a man who has never married; who cannot be trusted to pick up at sight a moderately sound horse; whose head is hot and upset with visions of domestic felicity, go about the choosing of a wife? He cannot see straight or think straight if he tries, and the same disadvantages exist in the case of a girl's fancies. But when mature, married and discreet people arrange a match between a boy and a girl, they do it sensibly, with a view to the future.

Properly speaking, government should establish a matrimonial department, efficiently officered, with a jury of matrons, a judge of the chief court, a senior chaplain and an awful warning in the shape of a love match that has gone wrong chained to the trees in the courtyard. All marriages should be made through the department, which might be subordinate to the educational department, under the same penalty as that attaching to the transfer of land without a stamped document. But government won't take suggestions. It pretends that it is too busy. However, I will put my notion on record, and explain the example that illustrates the theory.

Once upon a time there was a good young man—a first class officer in his own department—a man with a career before him and, possibly, a K. C. I. E. at the end of it. All his superiors spoke well of him, because he knew how to hold his tongue and his pen at the proper times. There are today only 11 men in India who possess this secret, and they have all, with one exception, attained great honor and enormous incomes.

This good young man was quiet and self contained, too old for his years by far—which always carries its own punishment. Had a subaltern, or a tea planter's assistant, or anybody who enjoys life and has no care for tomorrow done what he tried to do not a soul would have cared. But when Peythroppe—the estimable, virtuous, economical, quiet, hard working, young Peythroppe—fell, there was a flutter through five departments.

The manner of his fall was in this way: He met a Miss Castries—D'Castries it was originally, but the family dropped the D' for administrative reasons—and he fell in love with her even more energetically than he worked. Understand clearly that there was not a breath of a word to be said against Miss Castries—not a shadow of a breath. She was good and very lovely—possessed what innocent people at home call a "Spanish" complexion, with thick blue black hair growing low down on the forehead into a "widow's peak" and big violet eyes under eyebrows as black and as straight as the borders of a "gazette extraordinary" when a big man dies. But—but—but— Well, she was a very sweet girl and very pious, but for many reasons she was "impossible." Quite so. All good mammas know what "impossible" means. It was obviously absurd that Peythroppe should marry her. The little opal tinted onyx at the base of her finger nails said this as plainly as print. Further, marriage with Miss Castries meant marriage with several other Castries—Honorary Lieutenant Castries, her papa, Mrs. Eulalie Castries, her mamma, and all the ramifications of the Castries family, on incomes ranging from 175 to 470 rupees a month, and their wives and connections again.

It would have been cheaper for Peythroppe to have assaulted a commissioner with a dog whip, or to have burned the records of a deputy commissioner's office, than to have contracted an alliance with the Castries. It would have weighted his after career less—even under a government which never forgets and never forgives. Everybody saw this but Peythroppe. He was going to marry Miss Castries, he was—being of age and drawing a good income—and woe betide the house that would not afterward receive Mrs. Virginie Saulez Peythroppe with the deference due to her husband's rank. That was Peythroppe's ultimatum, and any remonstrance drove him frantic.

These sudden madnesses most afflict the sanest men. There was a case once—but I will tell you of that later on. You cannot account for the mania except under a theory directly contradicting the one about the place wherein marriages are made. Peythroppe was burningly anxious to put a millstone round his neck at the outset of his career, and argument had not the least effect on him. He was going to marry Miss Castries, and the business was his own business. He would thank you to keep your advice to yourself. With a man in this condition, mere words only fix him in his purpose. Of course he cannot see that marriage out here does not concern the individual, but the government he serves.

Do you remember Mrs. Hauksbee, the most wonderful woman in India? She saved Pluffles from Mrs. Reiver, won Tarrion his appointment in the foreign office and was defeated in open field by Mrs. Cusack-Bremmil. She heard of the lamentable condition of Peythroppe, and her brain struck out the plan that saved him. She had the wisdom of the serpent, the logical coherence of the man, the fearlessness of the child and the triple intuition of the woman. Never—no, never—as long as a tonga buckets down the Solon dip or the couples go a-riding at the back of Summer Hill will there be such a genius as Mrs. Hauksbee. She attended the consultation of three men on Peythroppe's case, and she stood up with the lash of her riding whip between her lips and spake.

Three weeks later Peythroppe dined with the three men, and The Gazette of India came in. Peythroppe found to his surprise that he had been gazetted a month's leave. Don't ask me how this was managed. I believe firmly that, if Mrs. Hauksbee gave the order, the whole great Indian administration would stand on its head. The three men had also a month's leave each. Peythroppe put The Gazette down and said bad words. Then there came from the compound the soft "pad-pad" of camels—"thieves' camels," the Bikaneer breed that don't bubble and howl when they sit down and get up.

After that, I don't know what happened. This much is certain—Peythroppe disappeared—vanished like smoke—and the long foot rest chair in the house of the three men was broken to splinters; also a bedstead departed from one of the bedrooms.

Mrs. Hauksbee said that Mr. Peythroppe was shooting in Rajputana with the three men; so we were compelled to believe her.

At the end of the month, Peythroppe was gazetted 20 days' extension of leave, but there was wrath and lamentation in the house of Castries. The marriage day had been fixed, but the bridegroom never came, and the D'Silvas, Pereiras and Ducketts lifted their voices and mocked Honorary Lieutenant Castries as one who had been basely imposed upon. Mrs. Hauksbee went to the wedding and was much astonished when Peythroppe did not appear. After seven weeks, Peythroppe and the three men returned from Rajputana. Peythroppe was in hard, tough condition, rather white and more self contained than ever.

One of the three men had a cut on his nose, caused by the kick of a gun. Twelve bores kick rather curiously.

Then came Honorary Lieutenant Castries, seeking for the blood of his perfidious son-in-law to be. He said things—vulgar and "impossible" things—which showed the raw, rough "ranker" below the "honorary," and I fancy Peythroppe's eyes were opened. Anyhow, he held his peace till the end, when he spoke briefly. Honorary Lieutenant Castries asked for a "peg" before he went away to die or bring a suit for breach of promise.

Miss Castries was a very good girl. She said that she would have no breach of promise suits. She said that if she was not a lady she was refined enough to know that ladies kept their broken hearts to themselves, and, as she ruled her parents, nothing happened. Later on, she married a most respectable and gentlemanly person. He traveled for an enterprising firm in Calcutta and was all that a good husband should be.

So Peythroppe came to his right mind again and did much good work and was honored by all who knew him. One of these days he will marry, but he will marry a sweet pink and white maiden, on the government house list, with a little money and some influential connections, as every wise man should. And he will never, all his life, tell her what happened during the seven weeks of his shooting tour in Rajputana.

But just think how much trouble and expense—for camel hire is not cheap, and those Bikaneer brutes had to be fed like humans—might have been saved by a properly conducted matrimonial department, under the control of the director general of education, but corresponding direct with the viceroy.—Rudyard Kipling.

The Man, the Cow and the Elk.

While a freight train was lying at a small mountain station in Montana the engineer borrowed a shotgun and started out for a hunt. He was about starting to return to his train when a cow made her appearance. Before he realized that there was any danger the animal made a rush at him, and he ran with all his speed. But the cow was a better racer, and in a few minutes caught him by the clothing, splitting his coat from waist to collar and tossing him into the air. Getting to his feet as quickly as possible, he dodged behind a tree, and then, to his dismay, found that the gun barrel was bent so as to be useless.

The next ten minutes were very lively ones. The cow chased the engineer round and round the tree, and when he got a chance to hit her with the gun barrel it only seemed to enrage her the more. It was only a question of time when he would succumb to fatigue, when a diversion occurred which saved his life. An angry snort was heard, and a big elk appeared upon the scene, head down and prepared for a fight. The cow was so mad by this time that she was ready for anything, and in another moment the two animals dashed at each other. The engineer watched the combat for a few minutes, until prudence suggested that he should make a retreat in safety. He never knew the outcome of the battle, but the presumption is that the elk was the victor.—Bozeman (Mon.) Avant Courier.

A Tight Ring.

To remove a tight ring from the finger take a long thread of silk and put one end under the ring and draw it through several inches, holding it with the thumb in the palm of the hand. Then wind the long end of the silk tightly round the finger down to the nail. Take hold of the short end of the silk, and, holding it toward the finger end, unwind it, and the silk pressing against the ring will withdraw it.—New York Sun.

WILDS OF AUSTRALIA

CAMELS CARRY TOURISTS AND BURDENS.

The Beasts Consume Astounding Quantities of Water When a "Condenser" Is Reached—Lakes with Mirage and Occasionally One with Water

Water at Eight Cents a Gallon.

In Australia camels are quite generally in use as beasts of burden, and journeys to the mining camps in the desolate West Australian Bush region are almost invariably made with them. They are used either under the saddle or hitched before a wagon or carriage. Camels are also especially trained for use as bearers of baggage and other burdens, and the animals accustomed to that can carry from 400 to 500 pounds for long distances. In the towns at the edge of the mining district, which is as a rule covered with an interminable and monotonous growth of dense forest, these animals are not for sale or hire. At Coolgardie they can be hired at the rate of £1 per day for riding, and 12s. 6d. for pack camels, a big deposit being usually demanded on each one besides. A good fast animal for riding purposes costs about £70, as against £30 to £40 for the pack animals.

Traveling by camels is a very uncertain mode of procedure. The Australian animals are inured to all kinds of hardships, but sometimes they travel fast and sometimes with exasperating slowness, and the efforts of the tourist to spur them on when they choose to advance at a snail's pace, are usually futile. Every once in a while, when traversing the wastes, one comes upon a condenser, a plant where water is collected, to be sold at the rate of four pence or eight cents a gallon. It is astonishing to observe how much water will flow down the throats of the camels, and the bill, after all have been daily watered, is startling.

The first experience of actual bush life is novel, and this to a great extent compensates one for the inevitable "roughing it," a novelty which, by the way, however, too soon wears off and leaves the bare uncomfortable facts in all their uncompromising reality. Still, the first experience is not altogether unpleasant, and in the light of the big camp fire, with the surrounding forest extending like some huge cathedral into the distant gloom, the effect is distinctly impressive.

Occasionally the traveler gets into the open country and sights a large lake, with water in it. To the reader to whom the wilds of western Australia may be unfamiliar this astonishment may doubtless appear strange; it is, therefore, necessary to explain that out in those parts a "lake" does not necessarily contain water, though it may do so at certain times of the year, if any rain should happen to fall. As a general rule, these inland seas are but vast expanses of arid salty sand, whereupon the curious effect known as "mirage" usually takes the place of the missing element, and, as a rule, so realistically, that it was very hard, indeed, to believe that the distant rippling water, looking so refreshingly cool under the glare of the scorching midday sun, was in reality but a cruel deceptive illusion, which would gradually retreat as one advanced towards it.

Help for Geographical Study.

An English kindergarten game consists of a little box containing flags of different colors with an outline map. Both flags and divisions on maps are numbered with corresponding numbers. Flags of one color are used for towns, another for rivers, one for mountains and one for mineral fields. This idea might be used with advantage by the mother who goes through the geography lessons with her small children. If they were given bits of colored paper and permitted to make the flags of different nations, they could then be used to denote the territory of different countries.

Humor with the Puritans.

The first boatload from the Mayflower scrambled out on Plymouth Rock.

"I suppose," remarked Miles Standish, emptying the water from his shoe, "that we can now be referred to as landed aristocrats."

And when this was repeated to Elder Brewster and explained to him he almost laughed.—New York Recorder.

An old man who marries a young wife may have good taste, but he has poor sense.

The Halberd.

The distinctive weapon of the Swiss was the halberd, which was their principal weapon at Morgarten and Laupen. It is curious to note how the Teutonic nations, even to this day, prefer the cut and the Latin nations the point. We have been told by German officers that when the Germany and French cavalry met in the war of 1870 the German sword blades always flashed vertically over their heads, while the French darted in and out horizontally in a succession of thrusts. Even the German dead lay in whole ranks with their swords at arm's length. So the English at Hastings worked havoc with their battleaxes. The Netherland mercenaries carried a hewing weapon at Bouvines. The Flemings at Courtrai used their godendags fitted alike both for cut and thrust, and finally the Swiss made play with their halberds, an improvement on the godendag.

The halberds had a point for thrusting, a hook wherewith to pull men from the saddle and above all a broad, heavy blade, "most terrific weapons (valde terribilia"), to use the words of John of Winterthur, "cleaving men asunder like a wedge and cutting them into small pieces." One can imagine how such a blade at the end of an eight foot shaft must have surprised galloping young gentlemen who thought themselves invulnerable in their armor.—Macmillan's Magazine.

A Curious Divorce.

The charming old Duchess Wilhelmine of Sleswick-Holstein, grandaunt of the present empress of Germany, was the divorced wife of King Frederick VII of Denmark. The duchess, who subsequently married the younger brother of the present king, had no alternative left her than to demand and obtain a dissolution of her union with Frederick, for her place in his affections and at the head of the household had been usurped by her French modiste, who was subsequently invested by the late king with the title of Countess Danner. Many years later he yielded to her importunities and legalized his relations with her after a fashion by a morganatic marriage. Notwithstanding her antecedents she was treated with the utmost consideration by the present king and queen of Denmark when they were eking out a scanty subsistence in Copenhagen previous to their succession to the throne, and it was from her that the Princess of Wales, the present czarina of Russia and the Duchess of Cumberland acquired not only their unrivaled taste for dress, but also the practical knowledge which they possess of how to make dresses and hats.

That Motto of Sala's.

It is not generally known that Mr. Sala was the author of a quotation attributed to Dr. Johnson. The circumstances under which it came to be made were as follows: He had been a contributor to The Cornhill Magazine, and was contemplating further work for that periodical, when John Maxwell, a publisher, proposed that he become editor of a new magazine which Mr. Maxwell thought of starting. This offer he accepted, and Mr. Sala says: "To this periodical I gave the name of Temple Bar, and from a rough sketch of mine of the old bar which blocked the way in Fleet street Percy Macquoid drew an admirable frontispiece. As a motto I imagined a quotation from Boswell, 'And now, sir,' said Dr. Johnson, 'we will take a walk down Fleet street.' To the best of my knowledge and belief, Dr. Johnson never said a word about taking a walk down Fleet street, but my innocent superchery was, I fancy, implicitly believed in for at least a generation by the majority of magazine readers."—Boston Transcript.

Central New York Justice.

There is a justice of the peace in Oneida county who is regarded by many as a wonderfully keen fellow with a most accurate sense of justice. In the village where he resides no man is more important than the "jedge." Recently a man arrested for larceny was arraigned before him. The prisoner pleaded not guilty.

"Well, I think that you stole it anyway," said the judge without further inquiry or parley. "I suspect you," he thundered, "and I'll give you 59 days on suspicion."

The man who was suspected served the sentence.—Utica Observer.

Can Temper Copper.

E. G. Salter of this city, has discovered the lost art of tempering copper so that the metal may be utilized in place of steel for many purposes where corrosion puts steel at a disadvantage. He has made both flat and coiled springs of great elasticity, has made good knife blades, and, best of all, is able to weld the metal itself and weld it to iron or steel. Mr. Salter says his process gives pure copper all the qualities which it possesses when the secret process of tempering is employed. Trolley wheels made from tempered copper have outworn several sets of wheels made in the old way.—Detroit Dispatch.

Recording Music.

A French gentleman has at last perfected and brought out an invention which has long been looked for by many musicians. It is nothing more or less than a recording piano. By means of a kind of typewriting instrument which is attached under the keyboard anything that is played can at will be recorded by the instrument. The music so written is not recorded in the usual notes, but in a series of long and short dashes something like the Morse alphabet, which it is easy to reproduce in the ordinary manner.

A Poetess' Former State.

"They say Ella Wheeler Wilcox believes in reincarnation," observed the maiden in the fur jacket, "and thinks she was once a cat."

"My opinion is," said the damsel in the yellow buskins, "she's mistaken. She was a salamander."—Chicago Tribune.

UNCLE SAM'S BONDS.

HOW THE VALUABLE PIECES OF PAPER ARE MADE.

The New Issue Will Be a Duplicate of the Issue of Last Year—A Real Artist as Designer—Various Steps In the Processes of Turning Them Out.

The way in which United States bonds are designed, engraved and made ready to be turned over to the investor in return for his gold coin or its equivalent is one of the most interesting parts of the workings of the treasury department branch of the national government. The coming bond issue will not be what is technically known as a new issue, but will be a duplication of the issue of February, 1895.

The designer of the plates is a well known New York artist who enjoys high reputation as a magazine and book illustrator. This is Mr. Will H. Low, and for the past year he has been the star man of the corps of artists attached to the treasury department. In addition to the work of drafting the design for the bonds he has designed several schemes for currency.

After the announcement of a bond issue the secretary calls in the chief of the department of engraving and printing and tells him the denominations to be issued. These may be in coupon bonds of $50, $100, $500 and $1,000. The same denominations may be issued in registered bonds, with the addition of others of a higher face value. The additional ones are for $5,000, $10,000, $20,000 and $50,000. The issues of the two latter denominations have been very small.

After the chief has received his instructions he turns the matter over to the artist, who at once designs the plate. It is an erroneous impression that for every issue a new series of plates is engraved. The artist may use any one of a number of vignette likenesses of historic Americans, and he mortises it into the drawing.

When completed, it is submitted to the chief for his approval and then to the secretary of the treasury. If the design is all right, it is turned over to the engravers.

This usually requires from a month to six weeks. The engraving is done on a thin sheet of soft steel of a thickness of an eighth of an inch. By a secret process the metal is hardened when finished, and a proof is taken, which is submitted to the chief of the bureau. This proof then must be approved.

The plate then goes to the printer and the work of turning off the bonds begins. The bonds are printed on the same kind of paper as that used for currency and each impression is carefully watched. If any imperfection renders a copy worthless, it is destroyed by the officials, after being returned from the pressrooms. But for each sheet of bond paper taken out there must be returned a similar number of copies, either perfect or otherwise. After the work of printing is done the securities are counted and checked off and are then made ready for delivery to the purchaser. When their final destination is determined upon, an employee of the department, accompanied by an escort, takes charge of the bonds and delivers them to the purchasers. In the last issue Mr. Logan Carlisle, son of the secretary, had charge of the deliverance of the securities.

The difference between the two classes of bonds—coupon and registered—is great. The former are like currency, payable to the bearer, and no record of their transfer is ever made. The interest coupons may be collected by any one who presents them at a national bank or subtreasury.

The registered bonds are safer in case of a burglary, as they are absolutely nonnegotiable except by the signature of the holder as evidenced by the books of the treasury department at Washington. When registered bonds are sold, the name of the purchaser is placed in a book kept for the purpose. There are no interest coupons attached, but each quarter a check is mailed from Washington for the accumulated interest, which is payable at any subtreasury.

Should the holder desire to sell his registered bonds, the transfer must take place before some official of the treasury department or an officer of a national bank. The fact of the sale is then forwarded to Washington and the necessary alterations made in the registered bond book.

Although the face design of a government bond is less intricate and puzzling than the designs used on currency, efforts to counterfeit them have been rare. The noted forger, Brockway, was the author of the last bogus government bond issue that was detected. It was a duplication of a coupon bond of the issue of 1861, the first of the war loans, which matured in 1881. The denomination was $1,000. The work was poorly executed, and its worthlessness was soon detected. It was for this that Brockway served his longest term in the penitentiary.—New York World.

Mr. Gladstone and British Guiana.

Mr. Gladstone has a personal connection with British Guiana, as his family fortune was made there. His father owned a great sugar estate at Vreeden Hoop, in Demerara, and was a large owner. One of the Grand Old Man's first speeches in parliament was a defense of West Indian slavery, made just before the passage of the act abolishing slavery in 1833. He was undersecretary for the colonies when Schomburgk was laying out his line.

True Test of Knowledge.

"Watts, you know something about this Transvaal affair, don't you?"

"I thought I did until I tried to tell my wife something about it."—Indianapolis Journal.

These Saw the Cotton States Fair.

One million two hundred and eighty-six thousand eight hundred and sixty-three persons visited the Atlanta exposition.

A WASHINGTON CURIOSITY.

One of the curiosities of Washington is the great tree Gen. Noble (named after Gen. Noble, late Secretary of the Interior), which stands in the mall between the Agricultural Department and the Smithsonian Institution. The tree, a California redwood, was originally 26 feet in diameter at the base, 81 feet 6 inches in circumference and 300 feet high. The section shown was taken twenty feet from the ground, cut into forty-six smaller sections, some of these weighing over four tons, and transferred to Chicago. Thence it was taken to its present place as seen in the illustration. The interior diameter of the structure is 13 feet, with an average thickness of wall of 20 inches. A circular iron staircase leads to a platform 18 feet above. The whole has been roofed over and four dormer windows light the interior. Our illustration, with matter, is from the Scientific American.

MRS. J. B. FORAKER.

The Wife of Ohio's New Senator Will Grace Her New Dignity.

Mrs. Joseph B. Foraker, wife of Ohio's new Senator, was Miss Julia Bundy, and was married to the ex-Governor twenty-five years ago. She is the daughter of Hezekiah Bundy, of Wellston, and was a classmate of her future husband when, as boy and girl, they attended school at Delaware, O. She is a charming woman, domestic in her taste, and as fond as she is proud of her home. She has a natural genius for architecture, and it was from her designs that the pretty residence of the Foraker family was built in Walnut Hills, a delightful suburb of Cincinnati. The Senator's wife is widely read and of deep culture. To be equipped for intelligent discussion with him of matters dearest to his daily life, she has made herself familiar with State and national politics, and in other ways has been a student of the progress of the world. She is ever in close sympathy with her husand in his home and public and professional life. As a consequence, he consults her constantly and relies upon her judgment in shaping his plans, even in business and politics. Mrs. Foraker is the mother of five children—Joseph Benson, Jr., who has been associated with his father in the practice of law; Florence Margaret, who made her debut last winter; Clara Louise, aged 19; Julia Bundy, aged 15, and little Arthur St. Clair, who was born while his father was attending the national convention in 1892. Mrs.

MRS. FORAKER.

Foraker will be a valued addition to society in Washington. Her receptions in Columbus were notable.

Their Sharp Ear.

It is a well-established fact that horses have a much keener sense of hearing than man. Noises which we with the greatest attention could not hear, are sufficient to startle these intelligent animals. Long before the great earthquake of the Riviera last year, for instance, horses gave signs of restlessness, which continued for several days. While the people did not hear any subterranean noises until a few seconds before the first shock, horses had for more than seventy-two hours before manifested the restlessness and nervousness peculiar to these animals when hearing a noise which they do not understand.—L'Eleveur.

The Cars Will Run.

A Maine paper contained the following advertisement the other day: "I, Sam'l H——, forbid all persons trusting or harboring my wife Abbie ——, as I will pay no bills of her contracting from this date, as she has left my bed and board between three and half-past five in the morning while I was gone down to Wiscasset after clams. But the cars will run just the same. Sam'l H——."

Preparing for the Crowds.

Both St. Louis and Chicago hotelkeepers are preparing for the conventions with soldier-like promptness. It was as though the order were given: "Prepare to charge!"—Philadelphia Times.

NOAH'S CURSE OF HAM

POOR AFRICA FEELS IT EVEN AFTER THE CENTURIES.

The Partition of the "Dark Continent" by the Powers of Europe—But Twenty-two Million Square Miles Not Appropriated. What Each Nation Claims.

The continent of Africa has been carved out by Great Britain, France, Portugal, Spain, Germany and Italy.

The area claimed by each of these is as follows:

| | Square miles. | Population. |
|---|---|---|
| Great Britain | 2,570,926 | 40,704,000 |
| France | 2,902,624 | 23,788,000 |
| Portugal | 841,025 | 5,416,000 |
| Spain | 203,767 | 437,000 |
| Germany | 822,000 | 5,950,000 |
| Italy | 602,000 | 6,300,000 |

Besides these apportionments Belgium owns the Kongo State, with a population of 8,000,000 and an area of 802,000 square miles. Turkey claims, but England practically owns, everything in Egypt and Tripoli—population 7,980,000 and area 836,000. Liberia is a black republic, with an area of 14,000 square miles and a population of 1,000,000. Swaziland, under the protection of the Boers, includes an area of 6,370 square miles and 60,000 people under a tribal monarchy. The Boer state, the South African Republic, has a population bordering on 1,000,000 and an area of 112,700 miles, within which lie some of the richest mines on the continent. There remains unappropriated a total estimated at 22,000,000 square miles.

Great Britain has been openly anxious to extend her protectorate by intrigue, stealth or filibustering, but if France, Italy and Germany shall combine to preserve the balance of power in Africa further aggression on her part will be checked effectually. Numbers, it is true, are in her favor. Population to the square mile is 16 for British Africa against 8 for French, 7 for German and 10 for Italian Africa. Fleets, however, and diplomatic menace will be convincing against a disparity of colonizers and natives whose fidelity cannot always be relied upon. The other partitioning powers are likely to profit by the Venezuelan contention and leave no boundary lines for future Schomburgks to readjust or British premiers to refuse to arbitrate.—Chicago Times-Herald.

TO COLONIZE ARMENIANS.

New Mexico Capitalist Offers the Oppressed People 500,000 Acres of Land.

Amado Chaves, territorial superintendent of public instruction for New Mexico, has addressed a letter to Edward F. Cragin, chairman of the Chicago executive committee to aid the Armenians, thanking him for his suggestion of colonizing these people in New Mexico and offering to supply the necessary land free of cost. Mr. Chaves considers Mr. Cragin's idea the happiest solution of the Armenian problem that has yet been advanced. He has looked into the character of the Armenians and regards them as a very desirable class of settlers.

In West Valencia county, along the line of the Atlantic and Pacific railroad, Mr. Chaves has extended landed interests, and he proposes to place at the disposal of the Chicago Armenian association, free of cost, all the land it may desire to colonize up to 500,000 acres. Or if the committee deems best to locate the colonists on public lands Mr. Chaves offers his services to enable the people to secure such locations.—Washington Post.

STOLEN, A POSTOFFICE.

Was at Top of Alleghany, Va., and Paid $4 Per Year.

When Uncle Sam gets the present weighty affairs of the nation straightened out and can give attention to minor details of the government, some of the people living in Pocahontas county, Va., will be glad to have him scatter a few handbills worded somewhat as follows:

'Lost, Strayed or Stolen.—Postoffice known as Top of Alleghany. Description: Plain country office, paying a salary of $4 per annum."

The above named postoffice has been kidnapped. Prior to 1895 T. J. Williams had been postmaster. Then he changed his residence, leaving W. F. Willfong as deputy. A few days since Williams carried away the entire postoffice paraphernalia, and when last heard from he and the postoffice were in Green Bank, ten miles away. Some of the patrons of the abducted office went to Monterey making inquiry as to how to proceed to get the office back.—New York World.

Warriors Enjoy a Joke.

General McAlpin always relishes his little joke, and he always has a good stock on hand. Now, Captain A. A. Yates of Schenectady is another great joker, and is never so happy as when propounding an apparently unanswerable conundrum. The captain's friends know this, and never lose an opportunity of firing conundrums at him. The other day Captain Yates called at general headquarters, and had the following launched on him by General McAlpin:

"Why is Police Commissioner Roosevelt like a tailor?"

Auty pondered and puzzled and finally reluctantly gave it up.

"Why, that is the easiest of the easiest," said the general. "Because he made the saloon keepers close."—Albany Journal.

Married Almost Seventy-seven Years.

Wayne county, Ind., probably possesses one of the most remarkable old couples in the state, or the country for that matter. They reside on a farm in the northwestern part and are John and Martha Cates. The former is 95 and the latter 98 years of age, and they have been married almost 77 years.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

Matthew Arnold on Salisbury.

"Lord Salisbury is a dangerous man. I know of no one, indeed, more likely to provoke shocks and collisions than men like Salisbury."—York Gazette.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.

FRIDAY APRIL 24 ..... 1896

All the elements of a pretty legal fight are in sight in Madera county over the matter of Henry Miller's taxes. A telegram from Madera to a San Francisco paper thus puts it: "Henry Miller, the cattle king, has had his stock in this county assessed for eight times its actual value by County Assessor Hoskins. Heretofore Assessor Hoskins has not been entirely satisfied as to the correctness of the statements of Miller in regard to his property. It has been the custom of Miller to appear rather late in the month of March, and while admitting that he had more cattle in the county at that date than his sworn statement showed, claimed that the stock had been driven into the county after the 1st of March. Hoskins, therefore, in order to ascertain the true state of affairs, took one of his deputies in the latter part of February and the two went on what was ostensibly a fishing trip to the San Joaquin river. They remained several days and made a thorough investigation as to the possessions of Miller, and found that on the first Monday in March there were 8,000 head of stock cattle, 1,300 head of beef cattle and 1,000 calves in the pastures of the cattle king. The Assessor then went home and waited for Miller to make his own statement. When Miller was in town last week he swore that he owned in this county in the way of stock 3,000 head of stock cattle and 500 calves, leaving a difference between his statement and the actual number 5,000 head of stock cattle, 1,300 head of beef cattle and 500 head of calves. Under this state of affairs Hoskins promptly assessed the property at eight times its value, or as follows: Five thousand head of stock cattle, $320,000; 1,300 head beef cattle, $208,000, and 500 head of calves, $12,000, making a total of $540,000 on which Miller must pay the taxes." Miller is not the man to stand this sort of a raise without something in the way of back talk, and it is a foregone conclusion that the matter will have to be adjusted in the courts.

The depression of farming in England has become so acute that the English farmers are agitating for a protective tariff on their produce. The hop growers are leaders in this movement, their profits having been wholly wiped out by the cheaply grown hops of our own Pacific Coast. Lord Salisbury told a deputation of the hop growers, a few weeks ago, that the party in power would never listen to their proposal, but it had ideas for relieving agriculture. It is an open secret that Salisbury will recommend parliament to authorize an immense issue of bond to provide money to loan to farmers at 3 per cent, so that they can thus refund their farm mortgages upon which they are now paying 5 to 6 per cent. It seems strange that conservative old England should thus be the first to seriously propose following Russia's example of Government loans to farmers on the security of their real estate. The Farmers' Alliance in our Western States made a like demand a few years ago, but weakened their case before the general public by suggesting that such government loans be in the form of a new issue of greenbacks. Since the death of the late Senator Stanford, the chief advocate of this scheme, and the disasterous experience in the Argentine with farm mortgages guaranteed by government, little has been heard of the proposition in this country. Certain it is that current interest rates on farm mortgages in this country are too high. The business cannot pay from 5 to 8 per cent. on borrowed money. It is full time for mortgaged farmers to pool their issues and refund their mortgages at a lower rate of interest, just as the railroads have repeatedly scaled the interest on their bonds. We would never advise the repudiation which railroad robbers so shamelessly practice, but the mutual interest of both lender and borrower of money on farm mortgages require a lower rate of interest.

A Vienna firm has discovered a method of making wearing apparel of glass. In our ignorance of the quality of the new fabric we are inclined to think it might resemble sack cloth, and be a potent and prickly factor in the mortification of the flesh; but we understand that it rivals silk in softness, the rainbow in hue, and the pyramids in durability. In this attractive invention there would seem to be much virtue. Of course the material is expensive, but when one grows tired of a gown, how convenient to be able to melt it up and have another made. For the envious leader of fashion it will be an godsend. She can have a skirt made of crystal, with looking glass trimmings, which will enable her to cast reflections upon her rivals' costumes to her heart's content. And above there will be the new theater hat. It may be ten feet high if necessary, with mammoth bows, and no one will complain, for it will be transparent.

The following California gold mines have paid dividends as follows: Idaho, $5,480,000; Standard of Bodie, $3,771,159; Kennedy, $2,734,000; Plumas Eureka, $2,606,295; Bodie Consolidated, $1,677,572; Sierra Buttes, $1,599,933. There are others. Unincorporated mines are the biggest yielders, one, the Utica of Calaueras, being credited with a steady out put of $500,000 per month.—[Mining Index.

Ohio now has a law providing that a county in which a lynching occurs must pay damages to the family of the victim. However, if the victim is assessed at his real value, even this would be less than the expense of a trial, while much more effective, and so the law may not fully accomplish its object.

His First Glimpse of the Sea.

King Prempeh of Ashanti never saw the sea until the day when, as a prisoner of the English, he was brought down to the coast and embarked on the warship that had been designated to take him to the place of his exile, where he must spend the rest of his life. The beach was crowded with a dense throng of natives, who shouted and sang and made a tremendous din when Prempeh and his companions came in sight. The expression on the king's face when he first beheld the ocean was one of blank astonishment, not unmixed with alarm, but he soon recovered himself and talked volubly in the farewell interview which he had before embarking. A detachment of the West Yorkshire battalion entered a surfboat, and Prempeh was placed in their midst. The chief interpreter followed closely in the wake of the boat conveying the king, whose every movement was plainly visible. His novel surrounding evidently made a great impression upon Prempeh, and when the Racoon was reached and boarded he was quite lost in wonder. Long before the Racoon started many of the Ashanti prisoners, most of whom had preserved a most stolid demeanor on coming on board, were painfully seasick.

A Frenchman's Dilemma.

"I begin to understand your language better," said a Frenchman the other day, "but your verbs trouble me still. You mix them so with your prepositions. I have just seen my friend, Mrs. James, and she said she intended to break down housekeeping—no, break up, I mean—her health is so broken into, and since smallpox was broken up in the city she thinks she will leave for a time."

After some difficulty he was set straight and made to understand that he should say broken up as applied to health, broken out as applied to smallpox, after which he continued:

"Mrs. James tells me her son's engagement is broken—broken off. He seems a nice young fellow and is a breaker, I believe."

And it was some time before his hearers realized that this last was not a pun, but only another eccentricity of the verb "to break"—that young Mr. James is a broker, and that his profession is not that of breaking either engagements or hearts.—New York Journal.

Walpole an Inspired Reporter.

Of course a man may choose, if he will, to be less than a free author. He may become a reporter, for there is such a thing as reporting for books as well as reporting for newspapers, and there have been reporters so amazingly clever that their very aptness and wit constitute them a sort of immortals. You have proof of this in Horace Walpole, at whose hands gossip and compliment receive a sort of apotheosis. Such men hold the secret of a kind of alchemy by which things trivial and temporary may be transmuted into literature. But they are only inspired reporters after all, and while a man was wishing, he might wish to be more and climb to better company.—Professor Woodrow Wilson in Century.

Hadn't the Time.

A man asked for work at the door. The lady of the house said that she would take his name and address and see what could be done for him. She offered him a pencil and bit of paper. "You write it, mum," he said. "I would write it myself, but I never learned to write." "Not even your name?" she exclaimed. "No'm, I ain't had the time." "Well, why not take time? I'll teach you to write your name at least. It seems strange that an intelligent man like you hasn't learned that. How did it happen?" "Well, mum, you see I went and got married young, and I've always been busy working, and I ain't had the time for learning."—Boston Transcript.

Used to Them.

Henpeck—Have you "Mrs. Caudle's Curtain Lectures" or some other book of that sort?

Bookseller—I'll see, sir.

"I wish you would, for I want to get a good night's rest."

"What has that to do with it?"

"Everything. My wife died a few days ago, and I think if I read a few pages of 'Mrs. Caudle' I won't miss her."—Philadelphia Record.

The single car propulsion common among the boatmen of almost every country is on the principle best seen in the tail of the fish.

Papier mache shoes for horses have been recently introduced, with, it is said, gratifying results.

Fish stories are commencing to circulate.

Chas. Collins came down Bishop last Wednesday.

Mrs. C. S. Meroney returned to Darwin last Friday evening.

P. H. Mack Esq. is expected home next Monday evening.

A. V. Davidson is still confined to his bed since his return from Coso.

The sheep are commencing to arrive. Several bands passed this week.

Chas. Partridge of Bishop visited relatives at Camp Independence the past week.

Ed. and Geo. Clarke came down from Bishop last Tuesday and returned the next day.

The cold weather of the past two weeks spoiled the fishing sport during that time.

H. E. Wilkinson, formerly observer of the Weather Bureau here, is now in San Francisco.

The late frosts have injured the fruit crop considerably in the western portion of the State.

The Taboose school house has been replaced on its foundation and all necessary repairs made.

Mr. Matthews, who follows the butcher business in Los Angeles, spent the past week in town.

Eugene Smith of Blackrock left for Los Angeles last week, going down with John Schober.

John Schober passed here with his big team last Saturday morning on his regular trip to Mojave.

H. Giles is still under the Doctor's care in Los Angeles and is making very slow progress towards recovery.

During the late cold weather the fruit crop was as badly damaged as it has been for many years past.

Rudolph Schober passed through town yesterday evening, with his team loaded with freight for merchants up the valley.

Miss Nettie Irwin returned yesterday morning from a visit of a year and a half at El Paso, Texas, where she had been attending school.

Dr. Woodin was called to Fish Springs last Tuesday by the illness of Mrs. Jones. He returned Wednesday morning and started immediately for Lone Pine and Darwin.

The recent law enacted by the last Legislature, compelling the closing of all barber shops after twelve o'clock on Sundays and holidays, was declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court last week.

A new post-office will be opened at George's Creek within a few weeks, and will in all probilities retain that name It will receive its mail by way of the Independence office, for which bids have already been made.

Mrs. J. D. Blair and daughter, Miss Maud Cook and Miss Annie Schabbell left for Los Angeles last Monday, going by way of Keeler and Mojave. They will spend several weeks in that city visiting with friends and enjoying the festivities of the Fiesta which opened there last Tuesday.

The east end of town had a close call last Saturday from what might have been a bad fire. The wind was blowing quite hard from the south-west in the forenoon, when smoke was seen coming from the house of John Keegan A crowd quickly gathered and the fire was put out before it gained much headway. A bucket of ashes had been set out in the yard in the morning, and when the wind commenced to blow a spark was probably blown to the trap door over the cellar where the fire originated, The loss was very light.

Neighborhood News In General Here And There.

EDITOR INDEPENDENT:—Mining news from the south end of the County in and around Panamint is very incouraging and new strikes are being made every week. A cloud burst or washout occured near Panamint one day last week and it is reported that a large part of the mountain was washed away uncovering a fine big quartz ledge measuring over twenty two feet in width and which can be traced for several hundred feet in the path of the water spout. It was a blind ledge and no croppings were visible until after the washout got in its good work.

J. G. Dodge of Lone Pine accompanied by A. C. Stevens came in from there last Wednesday and Mr. Dodge says there is quite a boom in that section.

Anthony's mine near Post-Office springs is widening out and looks better than ever. The five stamp mill works to perfection.

Chas. Richardson's latest strike about a mile from Darwin is reported to be the best yet found in that district and he will soon have a car load ready to ship. He shipped ten sacks this week as a test sample.

Mr. N. C. Palmer of Keeler left for San Francisco on last Tuesday's train en route to San Francisco where he goes for medical treatment. He will return in the course of a month or sooner if the doctors will allow him to travel by that time.

Miss Rosa Roeper of Independence is visiting friends in Keeler this week.

Mr. S. Zaun of Lone Pine is visiting in Keeler this week with his daughter, Mrs. Oscar Dearborne. The old gentleman was seventy years of age last month and is still enjoying the best of health, thanks to the bracing climate of Inyo County and Lone Pine in particular.

Mrs Dave Holland went to Mojave on last Friday's stage, en route to Los Angeles to take in the fiesta and then to San Francisco to visit relatives.

W. C. Smith of Modock was very sick last Monday and Walter Harris was sent in with a buggy to Keeler for Dr. Woodin, but up to Wednesday night the Doctor had not been able to start out, as he was in attendance on Mrs. Jones, near Tibbets, who is very sick. Such is life in a mining camp. No doctor within forty miles. It is believed that a doctor would enjoy a very good practice in this end of the county if located in Keeler where he could be easily reached from all the mining camps in this vicinity.

D. Holland has sold his butchering business in Lone Pine to Manual Diaz, and has also disposed of his butcher shop and trade in Keeler to Chas. Kaiser and M. C. Anton who thoroughly understand the business and will endeavor to retain the trade heretofore held by Mr. Holland.

J. Dooly has resigned as foreman for Lane at Darwin and has gone to Los Angeles for medical treatment. He has been on the sick list for several months and says he cannot work in the lead mines any longer.

D. C. Lane will ship a couple of car loads of ore to the smelter at Vallejo this week. J. A. McKenzie will ship a car of ore this week and probably another car load next week.

Mr. T. B. Scovil, the good natured and strictly religious miner and farmer of Georges Creek, has a rich quartz location near Panamint and it is reported that some of his ore goes as high as five hundred dollars per ton. All he lacks is capital to go ahead and develop a bonanza in which all his many friends wish him the best of success.

Supt. R. J. Laws accompanied by J. A. Yerington of Carson, went to Keeler on Wednesday evening's train.

The gentle breezes of spring allowed the following to blow into our sanctum sanctarum a few days ago and we find it is entitled "songs from an outlying district that out lies other outlying districts."

There is a young man of Lone Pine
Whe never indulges in wine
And who never could swear
Yet oft' smiles on the fair
Who says he is simply devine.

There is a young man of Keelaire
Who sometimes will go on a tear
And when he gets full
He makes it a rule
To have some one cut off his hair.

There was a young man of Pah-rump
Who thought he would jig an old dump
The dump did not pay
And friends of his say
He is now out there flat on his rump.

Financially yours etc.,
CONCENTRATES.

Inyo's Bullion Production.

The statistics of bullion product of California for the calander year 1895 have just been forwarded from the San Francisco Mint to the director of the U. S. Mint at Washington for publication in his annual report on the "Production of Gold and Silver in the United States. By permission of Superintendent Daggett, the reports have been published. In the list of counties published in the Mining and Scientific Press Inyo's gold production last year is given at $92,142.28 against $52,638 91 in 1894. In silver production the figures are $188,320.23 for last year and $83,540 00 for 1894, making a total gain of $144,102.60 in one year's productions. The total production of gold and silver last year being $280,471.51 The county leading in the production of gold last year was Nevada, it producing $1,789,815.60, with Calaveras, Placer, Amador and Trinity counties next in the order named, they all producing over $1,100,000. San Bernardino lead in the production of silver, producing $219,401.30. Inyo coming in second with the above named figures. The unapportioned amount for the State's production last year was, gold, $53,786.17; silver, $11,158.83. The total production of the State for last year is given as follows: gold, $15,334,317.69; silver, $599,789.70. In 1894 the production was, gold, $13,923,281.29; silver, $297,332.55.

Resting Springs.

Probably at this date there are few people in Owens Valley who know where "Resting Spring" is situate, and much less about the general character of that country. It is in this County very near the extreme southeastern angle of Inyo, the northeastern corner of San Bernardino, and about the State line between California and Nevada. It borders the Armagosa river, in the neighborhood of the Pacific Coast Co's Armagosa Borax Works, with which the late Wm. T. Coleman's history and great borax enterprise is connected. Besides, there have been whole books of other history published about it and surrounding mountains, mostly lies. The object now is to get some mail communication with old Inyo citizens, resident there for twenty years or more, who have been without a post-office since the one at Tecopa (a former townsite near Resting Springs) was discontinued sixteen years ago. From Dagget on the A. & P. R. R. there is a triweekly service to Pahrump, Nye county, Nev., which latter point is only thirty-three miles form Resting Springs. A petition, headed by the Lee Brothers and signed by thirty-five miners and prospectors within a radius of twenty miles, has been forwarded to the proper authorities at Washington asking for the establishment of a weekly mail between Pahrump and the Springs. It is proposed to make the veteran John Black postmaster and call the new office by the appropriate name of "Armagosa." We understand that a supporting petition, signed by our local Federal and County officers, will be forwarded from here.

Killing At Bishop.

Last Friday word was received here from Bishop, that Bill McCarty had shot and killed Joe. Lewis. Sheriff Given started immediately. Both men were farmers living in the vicinity of Bishop, and it appears, had a difference over the division of some land. Friday, Lewis got L. de Gloss to accompany him and witness McCarty remove some posts that had been planted. When they came within hearing distance of McCarty, he called to them stop or he would shoot. They did not hear him or did not heed his threat and he fired. Lewis fell, shot through the groin with a 45-90 rifle ball. When Lewis fell de Gloss turned to run and at the same time received a shot in the hand. After the shooting it is supposed McCarty returned to his cabin and took what supplies he could well carry on foot and left. He has been at large ever since, and it is reported was seen last Sunday, near Benton. Sheriff Given and Constables Smith and Drake and A. L. and Bart. McGee are on the trail, and news is expected now at any time. Sheriff Given has offered one hundred dollars reward for the arrest or information leading to the arrest of McCarty. McCarty is described as follows: Forty-years old; height 5ft 9in; weight 150; raw-boned; small deep sunk grey eyes; when last seen wore mustache and side whiskers, and had three or four weeks beard on chin; hair light, quite grey; scar on back of right hand, which has been injured; number 8 boot, high instep.

The news came last evening that McCarty was found dead at Teal's Marsh, Esmeralda county, Nevada, on Wednesday afternoon. He had committed suicide by blowing the top of his head off with a rifle.

Lost

A box about 2½ x 2 ft. and 18 inches deep, containing books and important papers. The box bears no address. February 9th it was put in depot at Citrus to await address. Thinking perhaps it has been sent out by mistake, with other freight to Independence or surrounding country, I use this means to ask the people to kindly aid me in the recovery of it by inspecting their freight. Papers inside the box bear my name. Address

MRS. GEO. T. RIVES.

Norman House, Independence, Inyo Co., Calif.

Estray Notice.

There came to my place at the "Tennessee Ranch," about 16 miles from Darwin, two horses described as follows: One brown, branded JE and vented JE on right hip and shoulder. One roan, branded C3 right hip. Taken up Sept. 10, 1895. The owner is hereby notified to claim his property and pay the charges upon the same, or I will, at the expiration of thirty days cause them to be sold according to law.

Death of Governor Jones.

Governor J. F. Jones of Nevada died in San Francisco April 10th. he had been ill for some months, having a cancer in his stomach, and had gone to San Francisco to consult the most eminent physicians on the coast, but to no use. He was 55 years of age at the time of his death. The funeral took place in Carson on the 15th. A wife and two children are left to mourn his loss.

Complicated Questions.

We observe in several of our exchanges lists of questions propounded to persons who desire to become schoool-teachers. Most of the conundrums are slushily silly. We paraphrase one that was fired at an applicant in Inyo—something like this: "If the President of the United States is 54 inches around the equatorial bulge, how long will it take a toothless Chinaman to eat a barrel of soft soap at a nigger funeral?"—[Mining Index.

They Blamed The Assayer.

Assayers are to generally the butt of practical jokers in new mining camps. Many of the old timers up in Utah will remember how the boys got hold of a piece of a Morman's grindstone and worked it off on the camp assayer. The assayer made it go $300 to the ton in silver, and he was run out of the camp. This is said to be a true story. In the early days the Morman made the grindstones out of what afterwards was known the world over as Silver Cliff. That cliff was a sand carbonate and it was eventually discovered to be a wonderful deposit of silver ore. But that was to late to help the poor assayer who assayed the grindstone.—[Bulletin.

Absolutely Pure

I have known a few men to pay outlawed debts for conscience's sake, but every time I have traded horses with one of them he took all manner of pains to hide the ringbones and spavins and git the big end of the deal.

When I hear of a man being friendless I do not put it down to any shortcomings of his. On the contrary, I know that he lent the first fifty $5 or $10 apiece and so estranged them, and the last fifty were refused and thus driven to talk against him. The world's friendship is more to be dreaded than the world's enmity.

There's heaps o' men who'll cheerfully spend two hours any day teachin' a dog to jump over a stick, but if their grown-up children don't know the alphabet they never worry over the fact.

It took the old man Parker ten years to make up his mind that it only rained thirty-nine days and nights instead of forty, and just as he had it all settled they carried the whole family off to the poorhouse as paupers.

A man makes a fool of himself about once a month durin' his natural life, and yet because his horse balks once a year he jumps on his hat and wants to shoot somebody or somethin' right off quick.

I may be mistaken about it, but it has always seemed to me that the principal object in makin' campaign speeches was to give a few hundred men opportunity to lie about those who could not agree with 'em on matters in general.

We could probably have had chestnuts without worms if anybody had thought to mention it in time, but as we were all busy askin' after 'taters without any pits in 'em the chestnuts were overlooked. This bein' the case, the wiser way is to take what comes or turn to peanuts.

It isn't bein' disappointed in the big things of life which hurt a man the worst. The defeated candidate for Governor gits over it after a few days, but the man who is kicked while applyin' mutton-taller to the sore heel of a mule can't feel right towards the world under twelve months.

Paris Omnibuses.

Complaints that the Omnibus company darken their windows with advertisements are rife in Paris as in London. In Paris, however, the offending bills are put, not in the windows of the vehicles, but in those of the stations, where most people who have had experience of riding in the omnibuses of the French capital have spent many a tedious half hour. It is well known that French conductors can set down passengers, but cannot pick them up. The passengers have to go to the nearest station, as on the railways, there to wait their turn, and there being no competing underground railways and an insufficient number of omnibuses to meet the requirements of the traffic, they often have to wait a long time. In these circumstances it is felt to be a hardship that they cannot see the omnibuses from the inside as they draw up, but have to rush out in the cold or rain every time one comes rumbling up to see whether it is the one they want.—London Daily News.

Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness, without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, then laxatives or other remedies are not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, then one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction.

"Dreams! Dreams!"

Soon after Disraeli had quitted the active arena of the house of commons for the "gilded mausoleum" of the house of lords he was visited at his house by his friend, Lord Gower. The two men sat by the fire in the grate, and the ex-premier talked of his own political career. At last he ceased talking, and gazing abstractedly into the burning coals muttered, "Dreams! Dreams!"

The mournful, half audible exclamation is suggestive. Apparently it indicated that he who had for long, laborious years devoted himself to his country found in that fact no solid satisfaction. Is that the usual fate of retired statesmen?

The incident is quoted by Mr. Tuckerman as a thought provoking addition to his account of an interview with William H. Seward, published in "Personal Recollections of Notable People."

While Mr. Seward, in 1872, was suffering from paralysis at his home in Auburn, N. Y., Mr. Tuckerman went out of his way to pay his respects to the veteran statesman. He found him unable to use his arms and legs, but with his mental faculties unimpaired. For the two days the guest enjoyed the statesman's hospitality he was entertained with reminiscences and anecdotes.

When he was departing, Mr. Seward took him aside and said: "Now tell me what I can do for you. If I possess any influence with the present administration, I am at your service."

Mr. Tuckerman replied that the only service he could do for him was to get better health at his earliest convenience, and to let the world hear from him occasionally.

"Do you mean to say," asked Mr. Seward, "that you came out of your way to visit a broken down old man like me without a single interested motive beyond that of seeing me?"

He noticed that his guest was annoyed by the implication, and added, with emotion, "I do not have many such visitors nowadays."—Youth's Companion.

The Vague Laureate.

It would be pleasant to think of Spenser as poet laureate to Queen Elizabeth, and there are those who do so, but strict criticism cannot allow the claim. It is true that Spenser became a courtier and flattered the queen in the extraordinarily exaggerated style of the time, and that when he dedicated the first three books of the "Faerie Queene" to Elizabeth she gave him a pension of £50 a year. It is true also that Spenser speaks of himself as the wearer of the laurel leaf. In one of the sonnets to the lady who was to become his wife he says:

The laurel leaf, which you this day do wear,
Gives me great hope of your relenting mind,
For, since it is the badge which I do bear,
You, bearing it, do seem to me inclin'd.

But this is nothing more than the usual formal reference to the laurel as the poet's special tree. No such office as that of poet laureate, as it is now understood, existed in Elizabeth's time, and few poets who have flattered a sovereign have had such bitter experience of the fickleness and cruelty of a court as Spenser. Like some of his more formally appointed successors, he was indeed buried in Westminster abbey. Yes, but he had died of starvation.—Temple Bar.

Interpreting the Koran.

The Koran is at the same time a religious and political code. All Mussulmans admit it to be so, and it cannot be expected therefore that, since their religion is connected with their national policy, they will not make use of the former to carry out the latter. Their policy may be briefly defined—namely, the maintenance of their faith in its purity by exclusiveness and isolation, the emancipation of the countries which have fallen under Christian rule, the extermination of the infidel nations and races who by refusing to pay tribute for the redemption of their blood are pronounced by the prophet to be in a state of open rebellion against the law and consequently deserving of death. Enlightened and tolerant Mohammedans will endeavor to palliate these precepts by quotations from the Koran and Hadis (traditions), but they are not the less cherished creed, the conscientious belief of upward of 200,000,000 Mohammedans.—English Consular Reports.

Eugene Field.

One of the many stories which are told about the late Eugene Field is of a little joke he had at his wife's expense. They had entered a street car, to find all the seats taken, save one at each end of the car, and they seated themselves accordingly. When the conductor collected the fares, Mr. Field announced in audible tones, as he gave him a dime, at the same time pointing to the far end of the car, "This is to pay the fare of the lady over there—the one wearing the new, beautiful brown silk dress." All eyes were turned to her, and her pretty face took a most becoming rose color, but back of the reproving glance she threw at him was one of mingled indulgence, appreciation and mirth at the unexpected and apparently truthful announcement.

Miss Noe Tsuda.

Miss Noe Tsuda, now a special student at a New England woman's college, is canvassing among rich philanthropists for a fund to give Japanese women a four years' training in America and fit them for teachers. Miss Tsuda is a woman suffragist in America, but it is feared that if she should divulge her broad views in the land of the mikado she would be a woman sufferer.

Ought to Fill the Bill.

"We have no use for bear stories," said the editor. "Our readers demand something spicy."

"Well," said the man with the manuscript, "this story is about a cinnamon bear."—Sports Afield.

The colonels of our army have each a salary of $4,500, while the lieutenant colonels receive $4,000, the majors $3,500.

A Transformation.

The effect of European clothing upon Japanese women is quite remarkable, for whenever it is adopted modern manners and customs usually go with it. The educated Japanese say that when a native woman adopts modern dress she insists upon the same treatment and courtesies that her sisters in Europe receive. It is a curious fact that when a woman is dressed in the Japanese costume her husband always precedes her when entering a room or in walking the streets and treats her as Japanese husbands generally treat their wives—that is, like servants. But when the same woman puts on modern dress the conditions are reversed. Her husband pays her the same deference that European and American husbands show their wives and recognizes her as an equal. Therefore dress reform has had a powerful influence in the advancement of Japanese women, and those who have embraced Christianity and are laboring for the emancipation of their sex are all working quietly, zealously and effectively to promote the reform that is going on in the home and the wardrobe.—Chicago Record.

New Point In Court Etiquette.

Miss Mary Philbrook, New Jersey's first woman lawyer, was in the chancery chambers in Jersey City a few days ago to make a motion concerning the foreclosure of a mortgage. All the other lawyers present had their hats off, and Miss Philbrook was in doubt as to whether she ought to take hers off, too, out of respect to the court.

To settle the point she walked up close to the bench and asked Chancellor McGill in a stage whisper if she was obliged to remove her hat. The chancellor looked amused and with a smile said:

"Oh, no, it is not necessary. Proceed with your motion."

Miss Philbrook made her motion tersely and with the utmost self possession. The chancellor reserved decision.

Mary A. Livermore.

Mrs. Mary A. Livermore celebrated her seventy-fifth birthday very quietly at Melrose on Dec. 19. She had a bad cold and was confined to her room most of the day. She received many congratulations by letter and telegraph and many presents. In the evening she made an address in the First Universalist church at Lynn, "A Dream of Tomorrow." At the close of the lecture she held a brief reception and received the congratulations of many friends. A formal celebration took place at Salem on Dec. 23, when Mrs. Livermore was the guest at the Thought and Work club. Mrs. Livermore at 75 is fuller of power than any young woman in Massachusetts. May she see many happy returns of the day!—Boston Woman's Journal.

Athletics at Bryn Mawr.

Bryn Mawr is keeping up with the other women's colleges as far as athletics are concerned. The Philadelphia Ledger says that Frederick Law Olmsted is now at work upon plans for the grounds. These provide for a circular bicycle track with four laps to the mile, and within this is a large space for tennis, basket ball and other sports. This will be so arranged that in winter time it can be flooded and provide a fine skating pond for the students. These grounds are kept in order by an athletic association of the undergraduates, who manage such affairs in much the same fashion as they are looked after at men's colleges.

The Woman of It.

"Now, dear, I have one favor to ask of you."

"It is granted."

"Then please don't tell me that you have never loved before, that you never dreamed that you could love, that I'm the only girl you have ever been engaged to, that"—

He (interrupting)—I won't.

She (anxiously)—But you have never been engaged before, have you, dear?—Brooklyn Life.

ONE THING LEFT OUT.

In acrobatic, gymnastic and athletic training one thing seems to be entirely left out; a thing which, if practiced, might prevent many serious consequences and thereby become the useful part of training. How to fall down easily and gracefully, with the least amount of resistance by the muscles, might be made a fine art. Why not adopt a slide and practice feet-slipping with these objects in view. Everybody knows that at this season the worst injuries result from not knowing how to fall. There seems to be nearly always a complication of injury in every fall, such as sprain, bruise and often broken limbs. It is true that for all these mishaps, either separately or in complicated form, and especially for sprains, St. Jacobs Oil is the best known and surest cure. Speaking of sprains, the very worst often result from falls, because the muscles sustain such violent twists from resistance. But whether there is practice of the art or not, the great remedy for pain is sure to cure.

"But, papa, things have changed since you were young." "Yes, they have. Folks used to wait fifty years for a golden wedding, and now they demand it at the start."

Spring

Is the season for purifying, cleansing and renewing. The accumulations of waste everywhere are being removed. Winter's icy grip is broken and on all sides are indications of nature's returning life, renewed vigor and awakening power

Spring

Is the time for purifying the blood, cleansing the system and renewing the physical powers. Owing to close confinement, diminished perspiration and other causes, in the winter, impurities have not passed out of the system as they should but have accumulated in the blood.

A Slave from Boyhood.

(From the Red Wing, Minn., Republican.)

"I am now twenty four years old," said Edwin Swanson, of White Rock, Goodhue county, Minn., to a Republican representative, "and as you can see I am not very large of stature. When I was eleven years old I became afflicted with a sickness which baffled the skill and knowledge of the physician. I was not taken suddenly ill, but on the contrary, I can hardly state the exact time when it began. The first symptoms were pains in my back and restless nights. The disease did not trouble me much at first, but it seemed to have settled in my body to stay and my bitter experience during the last thirteen years proved that to be the case. I was of course a child and never dreamed of the suffering in store for me. I complained to my parents and they concluded that in time I would outgrow my trouble, but when they heard me groaning during my sleep they became thoroughly alarmed. Medical advice was sought but to no avail, I grew rapidly worse and was soon unable to move about and finally became confined continually to my bed.

The best doctors that could be had were consulted, but did nothing for me. I tried various kinds of extensively advertised patent medicines with but the same result.

"For twelve long years I was thus a sufferer in constant agony without respite. Abscesses formed on my body in rapid succession and the world indeed looked very dark to me. About this time when all hope was gone and nothing seemed left but to resign myself to my most bitter fate my attention was called to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. Like a drowning man grasping at a straw, in sheer desperation I concluded to make one more attempt—not to regain my health (I dare not to hope so much) but if possible to ease my pain.

"I bought a box of the pills and they seemed to do me good. I felt encouraged and continued their use. After taking six boxes I was up and able to walk around the house. I have not felt so well for thirteen years as during the past year. Only one year have I taken Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and I am able now to do chores and attend to light duties.

"Do I hesitate to let you publish what I have said? No. Why should I? It is the truth and I am only too glad to let other sufferers know my experience. It may help those whose cup of misery is as full today as mine was in the past."

Dr. Williams Pink Pills contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are also a specific for troubles peculiar to females, such as suppressions, irregularities and all forms of weakness. They build up the blood, and restore the glow of health to pale and sallow cheeks. In men they effect a radical cure in all cases arising from mental worry, overwork or excesses of whatever nature. Pink Pills are sold in boxes (never in loose bulk) at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50, and may be had of all druggsits, or direct by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

Loss of Sense of Color.

The human eye, though trained to distinguish colors, may by want of use forget how to distinguish them. The unique experience of Dr. R. Harley, F. R. S., related in the London Spectator, establishes the fact that color can be forgotten, as well as learned, by human sight.

Dr. Harley, in order to save the sight of one eye—or perhaps of both—when one was injured, voluntarily immured himself in a room made totally dark for nine months.

The fortitude which enabled him to adopt this course and the ingenuity by which he preserved his health and faculties in this the most mentally and physically depressing of all forms of imprisonment are sufficiently remarkable, but Dr. Harley also kept an accurate record of his impressions when he at last looked again upon the light, after the supreme moment at which he satisfied himself that he was not blind, but could see.

He found that in the nine months' darkness his eyes had lost all sense of color. The world was black, white and gray. They had also lost the sense of distance. His brain interpreted the picture wrongly. His hand did not touch the object meant to be grasped. Practice soon remedied the last induced defect of sight. Experiment with skeins of various colored wool, in the presence of one who had normal color vision, restored the first.

The Kaiser's Sword.

Inscription on the blade of Kaiser Wilhelm's sword: "Trust in God! Be courageous in battle, in order that you may preserve your honor and your glory! The one who relies courageously on the aid of God is never beaten. Your strength belongs to the fatherland. To my dear son, Wilhelm, May 6, 1892. Wilhelm, R."

At the close of a long and laborious sermon by a local pastor he very appropriately gave out the hymn, "Awake and Sing."—Minneapolis Journal.

DON'T BE TOO LATE FOR THE STEAMER.

And don't omit when you are packing up your effects preparatory for the voyage, to include among them a supply of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, the great remedy for sea sickness. Travelers for pleasure or business seeking foreign climes, or who locomote by steamboat or train, besides yatchmen and mariners, testify to the remedial and preventive efficacy of the Bitters, which is incomparable for nausea, headache, dyspepsia, biliousness, rheumatism, nervous and kidney trouble.

Parson (to youngster fishing on Sunday)—My boy, I'm surprised to find you here. Youngster (innocently)—Do you know some other place where they bite better?

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

The Best Remedy in the World—It Makes People Well.

There is one true specific for diseases arising from impure blood and debilitated nervous system, and that is Paine's celery compound, so generally prescribed by physicians. It is probably the most remarkable remedy that the scientific research of this country has produced. Prof. Edward E. Phelps, M. D., LL. D., of Dartmouth College, first prescribed what is now known the world over as Paine's celery compound, a positive cure for dyspepsia, biliousness, liver complaint, neuralgia, rheumatism, all nervous diseases and kidney troubles. For the latter, Paine's celery compound has succeeded again and again where everything else has failed.

Views of America.

Sir Walter Besant, in commenting on Mr. Hall Caine's views of America and published in The Daily Chronicle, says: "We don't know the American people in this country, and we ought to know them; they come over here by the thousand, by the hundred thousand, and we do nothing to entertain them or to make their acquaintance, or to show them that we should like to know them. Are we ashamed of ourselves—of our homes—of our women, especially—that we do not want to show ourselves to them? We have no reason to be ashamed.

"The English woman is not so intellectually cultivated as the American, but she need not fear comparison. As for the people generally, I am right glad to see Hall Caine proclaiming the truth about them—that is, that they are 'almost childlike in their singleness of heart, easily moved by simple things, the youngest minded and the youngest hearted people in the world.'

"As I did not say this myself, I copy it, I steal it, and I adopt it. The material greatness of America takes away one's breath; the kindness of the Americans takes away one's power of criticism. One does not go away from a delightful evening and begin at once to carp and sneer and insinuate suggestions. Only, if by any machinery we could do something to make the American visitor feel at home with us, we should be doing a great thing for ourselves. I don't want him to be introduced to belted earls, but I want American men and women of culture to be able easily to meet English men and women of culture."

Badly Told.

Napoleon's Generosity.

Count de P—— had been raised by Bonaparte to honors and dignities, but for some unaccountable reason he betrayed the confidence which his patron had reposed in him. When Bonaparte became cogwizant of the man's treachery, he ordered him to be arrested. He was to have been tried the following day and in all probability he would have been condemned, as his guilt was fully established. In the meantime Mme. de P—— solicited and obtained an audience of the emperor.

"I am very sorry for your sake, madame," he said, "that your husband should be mixed up in an affair which places his ingratitude in so glaring a light."

"Perhaps he is not so guilty as your majesty supposes," said the countess.

"Do you know your husband's signature?" inquired the emperor, taking a letter out of his pocket and handing it to her.

Mme. de P—— rapidly perused the letter, recognized the handwriting and fell into a swoon. When she came around, Bonaparte put the letter into her hands, saying:

"Take it. This is the only legal evidence that exists against your husband. There is a lighted fire behind you."

The countess quickly snatched up the important document and threw it into the flames. P——'s life was saved, but as for his honor, not all the influence of a generous emperor could avail to restore it.—Chicago Daily News.

And Then He Proposed.

There had been a brief interval of silence, and he felt that he ought to say something.

"I see that the students of sociology have figured it out," he began, "that education"—

He paused as if in doubt whether he ought to proceed.

"Yes?" she said encouragingly.

—"that education is having a bad effect upon matrimony," he continued; "especially the education of women."

"I never did believe in too much education," said she softly.

She waited for him to speak, but he said nothing.

"I'm glad I never knew my lessons, anyway," she added.

Some men are slow to take a hint, but they are quick to understand when they are hit with an ax.

WANTING.

The new year has brought back the same old blooms,
The daisies for the leas,
The bluebells sweet, and the cowslips' plumes,
And the pale anemones,
And again with the golden fires of spring
The woods and groves are bright,
And the same old songs the blackbirds sing
In the apple orchards white.

And the dawns are bright and the eves are fair
As e'er in the days of old,
And the fragrant hawthorn scents the air,
And the gorse is of burnished gold,
And the wind has come o'er the southern seas
From shores where the nereids play,
And as of old do the brigand bees
On their clover blossoms stray.

There's an amber sea in the faroff west,
Where the hills and the sunset meet,
And the hymn of the throstle by its nest
Is tender and clear and sweet,
And I wait and watch, as in days of yore,
By the ivied trysting tree,
But, ah, never, never, never more
Can my sweetheart come to me!

—Chambers' Journal.

THE RED LANTERN.

"Oh, pshaw, pop! What made you get a red one?"

"Why, my son, I thought a red lantern would tickle you to death."

"Naw," returned Jimmy, contemptuously. "I wanted one with a green light. They're twice as nice."

"Well, now, that's strange," said John Saunders, looking at his boy's disappointed face. "When I was a youngster, I liked anything if 'twas red—a red wagon, sled, top. As long as there was some red about it I thought 'twas stylish and first class."

"Red is so common," said Jimmy, with great airs.

"Go 'long," said the father. "Aren't you ashamed, sir? That's the sort of airs you learn from playing with boys that have money—at least their fathers have. Red common. Well, so am I common; so's your ma, and, for the matter of that, so are you, too, I reckon. Don't forget that, Jimmy. You're the son of a laboring man. Don't try to ape folks who are better off in this world."

Jimmy Saunders picked up the despised lantern and went out to the barn with it. His father had just returned from the town with a few purchases for the family and among them this lantern, which was not up to Jimmy's ideas of lanterns. He wanted one with a bright green light and nickel trimmings like the one used at Mr. Somers' stables. Charlie Somers said they were much nicer than red lanterns, which were common looking and only used by railroad men. And what Charlie Somers said was law to Jimmy Saunders. Charlie lived in Chicago during the winter and only spent his vacations out in Indiana on his father's handsome country place. So, of course, being the son of a rich man and a dweller in the cities, his word had a great weight with the boy who had never been farther away from the farm than to the neighboring town of Dexter.

Mr. Saunders' farm lay next to the railroad, which wound like a great shining serpent through the woods, the deep cut beyond the creek and across the swamp and on to Chicago, that wonderful city of which Jimmy never tired of hearing Charlie's descriptions.

But just now there was trouble in the great city—mobs and strikes and confusion and chaos almost. Every day the boys could hear Mr. Somers speak of the state of affairs to the gentlemen who were visiting him, and all agreed that there were to be terrible times unless the city was declared under martial law.

And as the days went on and rumors of fires and killing and destruction floated out through the quiet countryside Charlie and Jimmy both became greatly interested in the news and plied their fathers with questions about the great strike.

"What did you hear in town today, father?" asked Jimmy, having recovered from his vexation over the red lantern, as his father was unharnessing Zebedee, the old gray horse.

"There's all sorts of news—the worst goings on in Chicago ever you heard of," answered his father. "And Dexter, too, is full of a crowd that's threatening to burn the depot. They've overturned a lot of freight cars and upset things generally around the station. I heard folks saying that soldiers are coming from New York some time tonight to re-enforce the troops in Chicago, and they were making threats that they shouldn't get farther than Dexter. I dunno," gloomily shaking his head, "I dunno what's going to happen, but I tell you one thing—I'm glad we don't live in Chicago, my son."

Jimmy secretly wished they did, so that he might see some of these exciting scenes, but as they didn't he tried to content himself by going to the Somers country place, half a mile up the road, to play tag with Charlie in pursuance of an engagement made early that morning.

When he went into the house to ask for his playmate, who was not outside as usual, he found an excited little group standing about the telephone in the hall and Mr. Somers listening intently to the unseen messenger.

"Perfect panic there tonight," he said as he dropped the repeater. "Troops fired into the mob this afternoon; killed half a dozen people; fires everywhere; wrecking going on and re-enforcements coming from New York tonight."

"Hello, Jim," said Charlie, coming forward. "Come on. Let's play strike. You be a freight car, and I'll be a striker and overturn you."

This new game was followed awhile, and then Charlie's fertile brain suggested another scheme. "You be a train full of soldiers coming from New York, and I'll be the mob and stop you."

So Jimmy, with many a toot and snort and "chug chug," rushed here and there among the shrubbery, playing he was a train, while Charlie piled sticks on the track and flagged the train and stopped it with a smart green lantern from the stable until both boys were tired out. The sun had long since set, and the darkness was coming on fast. "I must go home," suddenly cried Jimmy. "Gracious! I didn't know it was so late. Mother will be awfully worried."

"Well, be sure and come over tomorrow," cried Charlie after him, "and we'll play strike again."

"All right," answered Jimmy as he went whistling down the road.

As he came near the road Jimmy heard a strange sound. It was like the distant snarl and roar of the animals he remembered in the one circus he had attended in his life. He stopped for a moment to listen. The noise rose and died on the evening air, and mingled with it rose another sound like the clink of instruments against steel.

"That sounds as if somebody was hammering on the track," he said as he listened. But he was late and so hurried on toward home.

As he neared the gate his mother came running down the walk, her apron over her head. "Jimmy," she cried hysterically, "where is your father?"

"I don't know," answered the boy, staring in dismay at his mother, who was pale and trembling.

"Oh, my child," she screamed, "there's something wrong. Your father went over an hour ago down into the woods to find the stray lambs, and he never stays so late, and 10 or 15 minutes ago a crowd of yelling, cursing men swept by here like a cyclone and down into the woods, and father's there, and maybe they've killed him."

"Hold on, mother," cried Jimmy. "Don't take on so. I'll run down to the edge of the woods and see what's up. Father's all right. What would they hurt him for, I'd like to know?"

Though he spoke so stoutly, the boy was frightened, but he ran as fast as he could toward the woods. He remembered the noise he had heard at the track and suddenly it rushed over him what it meant. "They're sympathizers of the strikers," he whispered as he tore across the field, "and they're tearing up the track, I'll bet."

When he reached the woods, he stole along as cautiously as possible toward the din and uproar, which every moment grew louder. Suddenly he saw them.

There were 50 at least, bareheaded, ragged, prying up the track with crowbars—a frightful sight to a lonely little boy creeping among the trees. The stray lambs, huddled together under a tree, were bleating in a frightened, helpless way. Jimmy felt sure his father must be near them, so, creeping on hands and knees now, the boy crawled slowly along and suddenly saw his father tied to a tree, watching the rioters completing their work of destruction. As Jimmy saw his father Mr. Saunders, turning his head, saw his son.

Jimmy was not 10 feet away from his father, while the mob was at least 40 feet away from both.

"Jimmy," murmured his father, "run, my boy, run! The New York special with soldiers! Run up the road and signal it! Never mind me, but save the train."

With a half sob the boy crept back through the tall grass to the edge of the forest and then darted across the field toward the farmhouse like an arrow.

His mother met him. "Don't stop me, mother," he gasped. "Father's alive, but the strikers have got him. You run to Mr. Somers' for help. I'm going to signal the special." Signal the special! Suddenly he stopped. What with? How could he, a little boy, stop a train before it reached the cut yonder? Ah, the red lantern, the despised, common thing he had sneered at that very day.

Two minutes later this towheaded, freckled faced young hero was flying up the track, his red lantern lighted, his bare feet spurning the earth, panting, stumbling, sobbing, falling, up again and on, on.

A low rumble broke on his ear. The rails began singing under his feet. "It's coming!" he shrieked, and putting all his remaining strength into this last effort he dashed on a few rods farther.

There came a great white light glowing at him like an angry eye, nearer and nearer, larger, brighter. Would they ever see him as he stood there, desperately gripping his red lantern and swinging it with both his tired little arms?

At last! The engine gave a scream. "I see you, Jimmy!" it seemed to cry to the poor child. Then a shiver ran through the long train. It groaned and stopped, the engine panting and sighing, at the feet of James Saunders, hero.

Do you suppose, if Jimmy lives to be 100 years old, he will ever forget that moment—the shouts, the questions, the excitement, the soldiers crowding around him, the glistening bayonets, the praise, the thanks, all the pride of the instant as he knew that he, a little prairie lad, had saved the special laden with Uncle Sam's troops?—Advance.

The First Log Cabin In Kentucky.

The flourishing little city of Harrodsburg, the county seat of Mercer county, Ky., was the scene in the latter part of the last century of some very exciting episodes in the history of the early settlers in the young state. On June 16, 1774, Captain James Harrod of Virginia, who had brought a party of settlers to the new country, laid off a town site at Big Spring Camp, where they had erected the first cabin ever built in Kentucky. They allotted to each man a half acre lot and a ten acre out lot. The town's first name was Harrodstown, but later this was changed to Harrodsburg. A clearing was made in the east end of the town boundary, and here it was that John Harman planted and raised the first corn that was known to have been grown in the state. Only a few weeks after this auspicious beginning of the town's promoters four of Harrod's men were ambushed by Indians. Jared Cowan was killed. The other men escaped, only one of them being injured.—Louisville Post.

WORSE THAN DEATH.

HOW CAPTURED CUBAN REBELS ARE PUNISHED.

Terrible Tortures that Await Luckless Insurgents in Spanish Prisons—Shackled and Walled Up in Damp Dungeons and Left to Rot and Die.

Cells Are Living Tombs.

The desperation of the Cubans who are fighting Spain for the liberty of their island excites wonder at times in the American mind, and some are inclined to thing them too bloodthirsty in their system of warfare. It is true, very little quarter is given the Spanish soldiery in any of the conflicts where the insurgents have the upper hand, but there is a good, substantial reason for this seeming heartlessness.

The soldiers of the insurgent army know that a fate blacker than death will be their allotment if they fail. The kingdom of Spain has never displayed a gentle hand to its enemies. Dark echoes of the inquisition permeate its treatment of malefactors, for as such the Cuban insurgents are regarded. The prison system of Spain is more barbarous to-day than that of either Turkey or Russia, and that is saying a good deal.

For more than a thousand years the Spaniards have made a study of torture, and the long accumulation of knowledge handed from one generation to another, and elaborated on by each, makes their prisons the worst on earth. There are men forgotten and unnamed rotting away in the Spanish dungeons to-day, under conditions more horrible than that pictured by Dickens in his Tale of Two Cities, in the character of the old doctor confined in the Bastile for twenty-five years. Men who took part in the previous Cuban rebellion, nearly a generation ago, may still be living in the dungeons. Thirty years hence some of the men who are now fighting so valiantly in Cuba may be rotting away in the same pest holes. It is this prospect which makes them desperate and bloodthirsty, and eager to accept a thousand risks to shake off the torture which awaits them.

Each week batches of Cuban suspects are forwarded to Spain. To be a suspect is equivalent to being guilty, and those who go will, in all probability, never return. If a wealthy planter is suspected of furnishing financial aid to the insurgents he is pounced upon and shipped off. Infinitely better would have been his fate if he had joined the insurgent army and been killed on the field of battle. The ordinary suspect is not executed, but if he be proved guilty of treason the garrote will speedily end his troubles. The garrote is the official form of capital punishment in Spain. Nearly all of the death sentences are executed in the Pradera de la Ysidro, in Madrid. All executions are public, and are usually held early in the morning. The criminal is always mounted upon the back of a tiny Spanish donkey and goes to the place of execution in a procession which consists of citizens, priests and soldiers. Prior to leaving the prison in which the condemned has been confined, mass is celebrated, and the death sentence is read to the guilty wretch. When the prisoner reaches the place of execution, he mounts a scaffold, and he is manacled to a chair. Then around his neck is placed the band of the garrote. Two turns of a powerful thumb-screw crush the neck of the victim, and almost sever the head from the body. Death is claimed to be absolutely instantaneous.

The political prisoner fares worse than the criminal guilty of assassination. Most of the political prisoners are sent to Ceuta, Africa. Ceuta is an old Moorish seaport town in Morocco, opposite Gibraltar. The town is on the side of the ancient mountain, Abyla, which forms one of the Pillars of Hercules, the Rock of Gibraltar being the other. It is almost impregnable, and is to Spain what Siberia is to Russia, with the exception that it is even more horrible. The town was built by the Moors about 945, and it is probable that there is no other place in the world where so many devices of torture are concentrated.

Ceuta is a very small place and the Moors constructed a chain of fortresses around it to guard against any possible attack. It is in the center of these ancient and decaying fortresses that the dungeons are located. They are hewn out of the solid rock, and are in tiers to a depth of fifty or sixty feet. The approach to them is made through narrow openings in the stone floors of the fortresses, and when the horrible hole is opened the foul odor of filth and decomposition is overpowering. These dungeons are inhabited almost solely by political prisoners, and many Cubans arrested during the present rebellion are there. Some are in solitary confinement. Others are in dungeons holding thirty or forty men.

When a man is placed in solitary confinement, a hole it cut in the masonry large enough to admit the passage of his body, and he is dropped in. A blacksmith follows and welds on the fetters. Locks and keys are never used. A heavy weight with a chain is welded about the waist. A chain attached to the latter is welded to an iron ring sunk in the wall of solid rock. The hole in the masonry is bricked up again with the exception of a small space a few inches square. Through this comes the scant air and the scraps of food allowed the victim.

After that the man is left to live or rot. The filth of these holes cannot be adequately described. Death is merciful here, for few men survive the torture for any length of time.

Once a Cook, Now Premier.

The son of a cook is now Premier of Austria. His name is Casimir Felix Badeni, and thus far in life he has basked in the sunshine of fortune's smile. His luck began two years before he was born, when his father, who had been a very good cook, was created a count. The title was at the time an empty honor, for the distinguished chef had so little money that he could not live with the necessary dignity. For a time it looked as though his two sons would be compelled to toil for a living, but luck again came to their rescue. Their mother's brother, Count Mier, had married the famous German actress, Anna Wierer, and this childless lady became so attached to the two Badeni boys that she bequeathed to them her entire fortune. Thus relieved of the necessity of earning a competence by their own efforts, Count Badeni procured an excellent education, was graduated as doctor of philosophy and entered the Austrian civil service. He was genial in manner, had a great deal of money to spend and was not averse to spending it, and he soon made himself the most popular Pole at the court of Vienna. In 1871 he became district chief of Zolkiew and two years later entered the ministry of the interior. In 1888 he was made governor of Galicia, an office he held until he was recently appointed prime minister of Austria by Emperor Franz Joseph. He is said to be worth $2,500,000, but his younger brother, who has succeeded him as governor of Galicia, has been more conservative in his expenditure, and is credited with being the fortunate possessor of considerably over $10,000,000.—Pearson's Weekly.

Truth's Rules of Life.

Never lie—or at least if you must lie, lie about something nobody knows or cares about, so you will not be caught. Avoid exaggeration. Every one is "onto it."

Never laugh at the fate of others—excepting only the predicament of the man who, with seven bundles of dry goods for his wife had fallen into three inches of city mud that should have been removed three hours before.

Never treat a man to a cocktail in the expectation that he will treat you to one in turn. On the contrary, stand before the bar talking about yourself until he is willing to treat you to shut you up. You are then ahead of the game and can cease talking with dignity and a drink.

Never give your seat in a car to any but a pretty woman. The homely ones all have disagreeable tempers and might not thank you, which would be disappointing, I don't think.

When a man asks you to lend him fifty dollars, don't lie to him. Be a man and tell him you haven't got it. You can't fool a man who is dead broke.

The Ideal Salesman.

A prize essay on the successful salesman says: "He must be enthusiastic! He will never be fully successful until he thinks his business is the best thing in earth! He must be true to his trade and earnest in his avocation. It is scarcely necessary for me to urge the importance of increasing his ability by learning all that is to be learned in the business, even to the minutest detail. The salesman should be an expert in the examination of his own goods. He should never represent a weave or fabric until he is sure of what he is handling. When he is himself cheated, his customer likewise is swindled. Once understanding his business the salesman starts out on the pathway of success."

The Wheel and His Grip

The first commercial traveler to adopt the plan of taking his bicycle with him as "baggage" to enable him to quickly visit his customers in country towns is a drug salesman from Portland, Maine.

NEW GOLD BRICK IDEA

A NEAT SWINDLE WORKED UPON A CONFIDING BRITON.

Letter to the Late "Mr. Y." Telling of Treasure In Which He Is a Share Owner, Falls Into the Hands of His Executor. He Takes the Bait and Is Hooked.

The story of the latest improvement in the old gold brick game comes from London and is told in Truth of that town in a recent issue. It cost one Englishman $6,000 and may have cost others as much. Truth doesn't tell the name of the victim, but calls him Mr. X. Some time after Mr. Y. died a letter was received in England addressed to him. It was dated San Francisco and was signed "Spencer." The letter was apparently written by some one who had been in correspondence with the man to whom it was addressed, and it was a report of alleged operations to get possession of a mysterious treasure about which Mr. Y. knew. The writer said that success had crowned the efforts of himself and friends, and that Mr. Y.'s share of the profit was $250,000. This share was to be sent to London in a raw state, because Spencer wouldn't allow it to be disposed of in America. The letter asked how Mr. Y. would advise having his share disposed of. The letter reached Mr. X., the executor of the estate of Mr. Y. Truth continues the story as follows:

"Mr. X. thought it worth attention, and wrote to Mr. Spencer informing him that the gentleman to whom he had written was dead and inviting further information about the enterprise. In due course an answer came back from Mr. Spencer, full of regrets that his 'dear old friend' should have died just when the fruits of his venture were on the point of being gathered. In a noble spirit of generosity Mr. Spencer expressed the desire of himself and his partners that the dear old friend's share in the profits should be paid over to his estate, provided that the executors would carry the matter through. For this purpose a meeting in New York was suggested. Again feeling that he would not be justified in dropping the matter, Mr. X. accepted the proposal and arranged to meet his correspondent in New York.

"To New York he went accordingly, and there met Mr. Spencer and his friends. They expressed surprise at finding him so young a man, and on this ground betrayed reluctance to go further with the business. Mr. X., however, succeeded in overcoming their scruples, and they produced the first sample of the treasure—apparently native gold in large nuggets. Mr. X. was to have every opportunity of testing the value of the stuff for himself. For this purpose two nuggets, weighing about 600 ounces each, were brought to him at his hotel. He was invited to drill them, and did so with a center bit. The dust drilled out was collected on a sheet of paper and taken possession of by Mr. X. for further tests. He fused it himself into a lump and took it to a jeweler, who at once pronounced it to be pure gold, and offered to buy it as such.

"Having thus satisfied himself, Mr. X. met his friends again and told them he was ready to complete the transaction. After complimenting him on the businesslike way in which he had acted, they told him that there was a great deal more of the stuff to be taken to England, and it would be necessary for him to make four journeys for the purpose, but that he could now start with the first two nuggets on payment of the 'thousand pounds.' The reader will observe that not until this point is there the slightest indication as to what the proceedings were all tending to.

"Mr. X. expressed surprise at the mention of the 'thousand pounds,' and his friends, on their side, were surprised at his surprise. The payment of £1,000 had been clearly agreed to in the correspondence with the deceased. Surely Mr. X. had seen references to it in looking through his testator's correspondence? At an earlier period possibly Mr. X. might have shied at the suggestion that he was to buy gold with gold, but, having thoroughly satisfied himself of the genuineness of the treasure, it seemed to him foolishness to raise any difficulty over a mere matter of detail. He cabled to England accordingly for the £1,000, and, on its arrival, paid it over to Mr. Spencer in exchange for the two nuggets, with which he departed for England.

"It will not surprise the intelligent reader to hear that when he got home and came to have the precious metal assayed it proved to be worthless, being composed, it is said, of iron pyrites slightly gilded and compressed by hydraulic pressure in order to give the right weight for bulk. The total cost of these two precious nuggets to Mr. X., including his expenses out of pocket, was about £1,200. No doubt he has also acquired valuable experience, but it will probably be considered dear at the price."

The New York police said that this trick was an entirely new one to them, but that they didn't doubt its truth.—New York Sun.

Speaker Reed Has Been There.

Speaker Reed is credited with saying the other day to a man who was glorifying the climate of Arizona: "Tut, tut, man! I have been to Fort Yuma, and I know your climate. When a bad man dies down there, he does not notice the transition."

JUST CHANGED JUNGLES.

William Astor Chanler Gives Up Tiger Hunting to Join Tammany Hall.

William Astor Chanler, the explorer who took an expedition into Africa and added a lot of things to the map of that continent, has undertaken another exploration enterprise. He has joined Tammany Hall. This step has caused no end of talk among his relatives. Some of the Astors, to which family he belongs, don't like it. But Mr. Chanler does not go about canvassing among his relatives when he takes a step. He simply takes the step, and it is understood that any adverse comment that has been made has not caused him to regret what he has done in this instance.

Mr. Chanler has met many weird creatures in his travels. He has killed elephants, rhinoceroses and lions. He has eaten fried boa constrictor while colored dwarfs sat beside him in the wilds of the dark continent, and he has slept in a tree with a tiger sitting at the foot of it with his mouth open waiting for him to drop. Fierce and untamed savages have danced around him, beating tamtams, and he has seen the coarse grained cannibal munch his unpleasant repast. So he is not worried by the terror that scares most decent New Yorkers from political primaries.

When Mr. Chanler first came in contact with Mr. Croker is not now known, but he has met him. It is understood that the young explorer is a personal convert of the great politician.

"Yes," said Winthrop Chanler, "my brother has joined Tammany Hall. I haven't any idea why he did it or what he means to do about it."

"Do you think he has given up exploration and means to settle down as a politician?"

"I don't think anything. I don't know. I don't believe he knows. He may join Tammany Hall today and go back to Africa next Tuesday."

The young politician is a brother of John Armstrong Chanler and of Lewis Stuyvesant Chanler and a brother-in-law of Amelie Rives Chanler, the novelist. She got a divorce recently. Mr. Chanler is barely 30 years of age.—New York World.

J. PIERPONT MORGAN.

A Story About the Man Who Headed the Bond Syndicate.

J. Pierpont Morgan, who has had a good many hard names hurled at him lately on account of the bond syndicate he was said to be engineering, conceals under a stern and unyielding business manner a charitable heart. Few of his many deeds of kindness become known. One of them is now being told in Wall street.

For many years an old man has kept a little candy stand close beside the entrance to the Morgan banking house at Wall and Broad streets, New York. It has always seemed like a blemish to the millionaires and notable men who swarm to that center of wealth, but Mr. Morgan ordered long ago that the humble vender should not be disturbed.

When Police Commissioner Roosevelt started to clear away all the street stands, the old candy man ventured one morning to speak to Mr. Morgan as he entered the bank. The great financier listened to the appeal and said that he would protect the stand himself. Just what Mr. Morgan did is not known, but financial affairs waited that day until the little business of the candy man was secured from danger, and the little stand still remains beside the banker's door.

SCARED THE DEVILS.

Lorenzo Thought He Had a Bible, but It Was Only a Hymnbook.

Lorenzo O'Dell is a typical colored man of Port Jervis, N. Y. He recently reported to the police thus: "I waked up dis mornin an der wuz a lot of debils, brack debils, ebery one of dem, jist dancin roun de bed an jist goin to grab me. I wuz scared mos' to deff, but I jist got right out ob de bed an grabbed my Bible, which wuz near by, an I jist hugged it up 'gin my body wiv bof arms. Jist as soon as I got dat Bible dem debils begun to back off an 'fore I got down stairs dey had all gone. I jist took a look at the Bible an dar it wuz only a hymnbook, so you see I fool dem debils after all."

One of the city clergymen presented Lorenzo with a real Bible.

Curious Ice Wheel.

A curious ice formation is attracting a good deal of attention in the river just below the falls at Lewiston, Me. There are strong eddies in the water, and the combined action of wind and currents during the hard frost has caused the formation of a great wheel of ice about 200 feet in diameter, perfectly circular and rounded smooth on the edge. This great ice wheel swings slowly and continuously round and round in the circling current of water at the foot of the falls.—New York Sun.

A High Priced Novel.

It is announced that the author of "Trilby" has accepted $50,000 cash for all rights to his new novel, soon to be published. It is also stated that this is the largest lump sum ever paid for the manuscript of a single book.

THE SEA IN HARNESS.

A MARVELOUS INVENTION FOR PROPELLING VESSELS.

Movement of Sea and Ship Compresses the Air Which Supplies the Power—Successful Test Made of Device—Company Already Formed to Exploit the Idea.

A new invention, which promises to revolutionize the coastwise freight carrying trade of the world, was successfully tested in Providence a few days since. A number of the leading men in local financial circles were present at the trial, and all were enthusiastic at the success of the device.

While many of the foremost inventors have been spending years in attempting to harness Niagara falls an old sailor has succeeded in harnessing the ocean, and, if one may judge by the success of the model, it will not be long before the cost of fuel will be one of the smallest items in the expense of running a freight steamer. At present the inventor, George W. Price, has no intention of applying his invention to the use of the ocean greyhounds, but an attempt will be made to use it upon the slower Atlantic steamers.

The invention is nothing more nor less than the utilization of the forces of the ocean to obtain therefrom a means of motive power for craft at sea. If there are any two things of which there is an overbundance on the ocean, they are air and motion, and the inventor has succeeded in obtaining his motive power from these simple factors, by an ingenious device of using a swinging cargo attached to air compressors in such a manner that every motion of the vessel, however slight, whether pitching or oscillating, acts as a means to compress the air, which, being conveyed to an ordinary upright boiler, quickly attains the necessary amount of pressure, which, let into the engine, starts it in motion, and the propellers or twin screws send the craft riding over the waves.

The details of the device are simple. The air compressors are housed on deck, and any motion of the water forces the air into them by means of a piston. In a vessel of 3,000 tons only one-third of the space would be used, and in this space there would be a large steel compartment, which would be hung on trunnions in such a manner as to meet every motion of the waves. In this 1,000 tons of the cargo would be housed, so that the cargo would provide its own motive power, and when the vessel is empty the compartment will be filled with water. In this way, the inventor claims, the vessel would not have to go into a coaling station, but little fuel would have to be carried, and the services of an engineer could be dispensed with, as a common seaman would be able to manage the new power, the turning of a screw being all that is needed to regulate the speed.

As yet the inventor has devised no scheme for storing the air, so it would be necessary for vessels to get up steam when entering a harbor. The test, however, has demonstrated that the invention can be used with the greatest success at any point not less than two miles from shore.

Mr. Price has also succeeded in putting his invention to other uses. As was demonstrated, the same power can be utilized to run a dynamo, by which the boat can be lighted by electricity, and to run the donkey engine with which the sails are hoisted and lowered.

The invention is one of plain mechanics, the force of weight and the power contained in the roll and swell of the ocean having been used to furnish the motive power. It is estimated that the cost of placing this complete device in an ordinary boat will not exceed $5,000. It can be used in any large or small sailing vessel.

All of the stock in the present company has already been taken by Providence capitalists, and New York and Boston financial men are already considering the advisability of forming a syndicate to control the subcompanies in this country and Europe. The company has already been capitalized for $250,000, but the secret of the invention has been kept sub rosa until the public test was made in Narragansett bay. The working model is seven feet long and is built like an ordinary barge. It is supplied with a swinging cargo and an ordinary rudder and propeller.

The inventor, George W. Price, was born in Smithtown, N. Y., Jan. 14, 1850. On March 14, 1864, he made his first voyage as a cabin boy, and from that time until June of last year he has followed the sea. On Sept. 4, 1876, he was wrecked on the steamer Senora, from San Francisco to Liverpool. He has also been in the United States revenue service, and his last position was first mate on the Benjamin F. Poole.

For more than ten years Mr. Price has been at work upon his invention, but early last year he made a practical demonstration of the device, and it was so successful that he decided to leave the sea and perfect his plans. His first step was to obtain the support of local capitalists, and, being a skillful mechanic, he took charge of the work of building his model, which was done at the works of the Cruikshank company in Providence. Mr. Price does not claim that his invention will at present make more than from 7 to 12 miles an hour, so, while it would be of little value to the fast ocean steamers, the great saving in fuel and running expenses will make it of inestimable value to the slower ocean steamers and the freight and other vessels that are engaged in the coastwise trade. It is to be placed on the market at once.—New York Journal.

New State Capitol For Mississippi.

A bill has been introduced in the Mississippi state senate providing for the building of a new state capitol to cost $1,000,000. The bill provides for the issuance of bonds bearing 4 per cent interest, a tax levy of $500,000 to pay the interest and a sinking fund to pay the principal.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

IRV. H. MULHOLLAND, EDITOR.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.

FRIDAY, MAY 1 ..... 1896

Russia seems to be waking up. The Baldwin Locomotive Works of Philadelphia have just closed another important contract with the Russian Government for sixty large freight engines to be finished by July 1st. With the completion of this contract the company will have constructed since October, 1895, 134 engines for the Russians. The previous orders have all been filed. A little light and freedom in the great country and well may the nations of Europe fear any hostile move she may make. It may call for a combination of all them to check her progress. Surely the rapid building of railroads and other modern appliances means the progress of intelligence and education, and the over-coming of prejudice and ignorance, two great influences which have kept the most powerful monarchy of the world the least able to use its strength.

The release of Dick McDonald from custody on the representations of the district attorney of San Francisco that there was an insufficiency of evidence to convict him, adds another instance to the records in substantiation of the claim that rich men are frequently beyond the reach of justice. Had McDonald been a man without means and influence, the greater portion of the two years spent by him in the county jail awaiting the action of the courts have been spent in Folsom or San Quentin as part service of a severe penalty. It is such farcial proceedings as these that disgust the average American citizen with our judicial system and impress him with the not altogether unjust opinion that, when confronted with the power of the almighty dollar, the law loses much of its majesty.

It is small politics that prevents Congress from according Statehood to the territories of Arizona and New Mexico. Both have sufficient population and are growing steadily. Oklahoma is another territory that should be made a state. The people living in these territories are affected by the laws of Congress the same as the people living in the States are, yet they have no voice in the making the laws. When the west was sparsely settled and occupied mainly by the rougher elements found on the borders of civilization, there was excuse for withholding Statehood. At present there is none.

The movement in San Francisco for the reduction of street car fares is gathering force. The Railroad Commissioners are taking seriously the proposition to test the the question whether they can cut down the rates to three cents, and the improvements clubs are preparing to move upon whatever authorities may have the legal right to regulate the matter and demand a 2½ cent fare. When San Franciscans want anything they ask for it and if they fail to receive it they keep asking for it.

The man or men who want to hold all the claims in sight even without doing the requisite $100 worth of annual work or improvements will be given a close rub this year. Too many claims are held by those who, whether unwilling or unable, do nothing but hang on from year to year, some of them looking for the purchaser who never comes, and never will come till something more than a mere "prospect" can be shown.—Mining and Scientific Press.

A Nebraska court has decided that gold contracts are void. Gold contracts violate the constitution, which says that the money of the United States shall be gold and silver. To make a contract specifically payable in gold or silver is to discriminate in favor of the preferred metal. All contracts providing for the payment of money should read "payable in lawful money of the United States."

Congressman Bryan has been doing a little figuring and he has announced as the result of his labors the conclusion that there will be 516 silver delegates at the Chicago convention, 310 for gold and 68 doubtful. As we have no way of disproving Mr. Bryan's statement prior to the selection of the delegates themselves, we will take his word for it, for the present, together with liberal quantities of salt.

It is said that the United States Supreme Court has recently decided that a person divorced in one state and ordered not to remarry cannot evade that order by marrying in another state. This decision is somewhat startling and leaves hundreds of couples supposed to be husband and wife in a most unhappy predicament. A uniform divorce law is now an absolute necessity.

No one ever yet heard of a man deliberately becoming a candidate for Vice President and the announcement of such an ambition would cause its professor to be looked upon as a fit couch for a lunacy commission. The Vice President is only a cowardly geographical makeshift.—Ex.

President Kruger has claimed an indemnity of $1,500,000 from the British South African Company for the recent raid of Jameson into the transvaal. $7,500,000 is a nice sum to have to pay for Jameson's fun; but it is one thing to claim it, and anther to get the money.

The blind hog finds an acorn at last. The United States Supreme Court, Monday affirmed the decision of the Supreme Court of Nevada, that all patented and surveyed lands of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company were subject to taxation.

Of the 10,000 bills introduced in the present Congress only 37 have become laws.

Chestnut.

Mr. Joseph Jefferson attributes the introduction of the word "chestnut" in its slang sense to the late William Warren, the veteran comedian, of Boston. "There is a melodrama," says Mr. Jefferson, "but little known to the present generation, written by William Dillon and called 'The Broken Sword.' There were two characters in it—one a Captain Zavier and the other the comedy part of Pablo. The captain is a sort of Baron Munchausen, and in telling of his exploits says, 'I entered the woods of Colloway, when suddenly from the thick boughs of a cork tree'— Pablo interrupts him with the words, 'A chestnut, captain; a chestnut.' 'Bah!' replies the captain. 'Booby, I say a cork tree.' 'A chestnut,' reiterates Pablo. 'I should know as well as you, having heard you tell the tale these 27 times.'

"William Warren, who had often played the part of Pablo, was at a 'stag' dinner when one of the gentlemen present told a story of doubtful age and originality. 'A chestnut,' murmured Mr. Warren, quoting from the play. 'I have heard you tell the tale these 27 times.' The application of the lines pleased the rest of the table, and when the party broke up each helped to spread the story and Mr. Warren's commentary. And that," concluded Mr. Jefferson, "is what I really believe to be the origin of the word 'chestnut.'"—New York World.

Why He Was Apprehensive.

"'Scuse me, sah," he said as he approached one of the attaches of the Smithsonian institution, "but I wants ter ax yoh sumfin."

"What's the matter?" was the inquiry. "Are you looking for something to eat?"

"N'ndeed. I ain't hungry. I wants sci'ntific infohmation. I wants ter know 'bout dese hyah X rays dat dey's takin de phortygrafs wif. Dey done tells me dey kin take picters right fro yer. Dat when dey goes after ye wif one er dem, yer skin an yo clo's ain' no 'tection 't all."

"That's what they claim."

"An ef I dun hed chicken foh dinner, I 'spose dey could jes fro me down an take a picter ob de chicken."

"I believe the theory is something like that."

"Da's what I thought. Da's what I thought. But yere's what I done come ter ax yer. Does yer b'lievo dat dey could git er good 'nuff likeness ob de chicken ter inable de owner ter reco'nize 'im?"—Washington Star.

Not Up to Date.

It is curious to note how conservative some of the old business firms of New York are in regard to the illustrations used in their advertisements and how they ignore the fact that pictures engraved for use many years ago are no longer calculated to do the subject justice. This was impressed upon me in looking over a book recently in which a page advertisement of that very famous hostelry, the Fifth Avenue hotel, appeared. At the top of the page was shown the hotel standing on what looked to be an all but deserted plaza. A single stagecoach was going up Fifth avenue, and several carriages were in sight, together with perhaps a dozen pedestrians, but there were no cable cars or horse cars, and the effect was naturally queer. It is a quaint old cut, and it must have been made "way back in the early sixties." New York with stages on Broadway! It sounds like very ancient history.—New York Mail and Express.

A Gentlemanly Judge.

In a conversation the other day District Attorney Graham told of his 25 years' experience at the bar with the late Judge Allison, and incidentally paid a sterling compliment to the dead jurist. "He was," said Mr. Graham, "a splendid judge, with a stock of patience that was inexhaustible. No lawyer can say that he was ever turned away from Judge Allison's bar without a kindly, courteous, complete hearing. His bearing both on and off the bench reminded me always of a passage in 'David Copperfield,' where Dickens writes in effect that 'a man might assume a gentlemanly demeanor for an occasion, but it is only nature's true nobleman who never lays it aside.'"—Philadelphia Record.

Cold Feet Versus Mentality.

You will never be in good health and never do your best work if your feet are constantly cold. Grave diseases of the throat and lungs are caused by cold feet alone, and these troubles are always aggravated by a frigid condition of the lower extremities. If proper footwear does not give relief, consult a physician, for the chances are the system is "run down" and radical measures are necessary. For cold weather leather should always be lined with woolen cloth, or, better, wool felt. In fact, for all cold climates and for winter wear in all climates where there is any winter a footgear made of all wool felt approaches the ideal.

Lord Wolseley.

Some one has just pointed out that an early incident in Lord Wolseley's career was characteristic of the spirit of the man. At the end of 1854, in recognition of his services in the Crimean war, he was gazetted captain. When it was discovered, however, that Wolseley was little more than 21 years old, the captaincy was canceled. But the young man protested so vigorously against this injustice to youth that by the direction of some higher authority the cancellation itself was canceled and the captaincy restored.

Inevitable Fate.

"You seem to me a very stupid person," observed the heroine of the society novel.

"And you," rejoined the hero, "likewise seem to me stupid."

"Then we shall be dramatized."

"Presumably."

At that they yawned.—Detroit Tribune.

So Much For Strategy.

"If you must read my secrets, do it now," he said desperately. Then, turning his back upon her, he deftly snatched her photograph from the table and pressed it hard against his bosom.

When by the aid of a powerful X ray, she saw herself pictured in the innermost recesses of her husband's anatomy, she fell into his arms in such a paroxysm of love and confidence that he went to the club four evenings in succession before the good results were over.—New York Herald.

Manners and Customs of the Boers.

The daily life of a Boer family is a simple one. At daylight all the members assemble in the main room—the kitchen and eating room, although most of the food is cooked in the open air—where the head of the family reads reverently a chapter or two from the Bible, generally the Old Testament; a simply, manly prayer is then offered, followed by the observance of an ancient Bible custom. A colored handmaid enters the room with a basin of water and a towel. The guest is first approached, and invited to wash his hands and face and wipe them on the towel. The head of the family is next approached, and so on around the room until all have been included in the ceremony. This constitutes the day's ablutions of the family.

The morning meal consists of a dish of meat—deer or mutton, and sometimes beef—cut into large pieces. They all sit around the board while the father says a long grace, and a stranger not familiar with their table manners is apt to be left in the lurch. Each man, for the women eat alone, selects the particular piece of meat that strikes his fancy, and as soon as the "Amen" is spoken sticks his fork into the piece selected. It happens sometimes that two select the same piece. Then the quickest man gets the booty. Dry bread, sometimes butter, and strong black coffee complete the bill of fare, which may stand as a sample meal. It has been urged against the Boer that he is uncleanly, and this cannot be denied, but there is an excuse for this in the scarcity of water.—Forum.

An Original Judge.

No more unique figure is to be found in the American judiciary than Judge Gaslin of Nebraska, and many are the stories told of this interesting personality.

On one occasion a man who had drifted over into Nebraska from Colorado, who was not familiar with the manner of administering justice on the Nebraska side of the border, appropriated a horse which he found hitched to a post in front of a country store. The horse happened to be the property of Judge Gaslin. The thief was captured and later found over to await trial in the district court. A few days after, Judge Gaslin met a fellow judge from another district and requested him, as a favor, to come into his district on a day specified and sentence a horse thief, as Gaslin said he felt a little delicacy in sentencing a man for stealing his own horse.

The fellow jurist assented and incidentally inquired when the offender was convicted.

"Oh, he isn't convicted yet," replied Judge Gaslin, "but I'll tend to that part of it." And he did.—St. Louis Globe Democrat.

Turning a Financial Corner.

An ingenious Chicago man, who has too often had the experience of spending all of his small salary Saturday night and Sunday and being "busted" Monday morning, has hit upon a novel idea, by which he makes Uncle Sam's postoffice department his temporary savings bank. Last Saturday he had a letter in his hand and an acquaintance happened to see the address on it. "Well," said he, "that's the first time I ever heard of a man writing a letter to himself." "I'll be mighty glad to get that letter Monday morning. It has $5 in it. I mail it tonight, and as we don't have any house delivery until Monday morning I can't possibly get at it before then. No, if I'm a blamed fool and get into a poker game or spend all my money setting 'em up I'm sure to have a little left on Monday. It's better'n a bank and a good deal more reliable than loaning it out. I know the money will be returned to me Monday."—Chicago Record.

At the Spanish Restaurant.

In the lazy, overheated air of the Spanish restaurant, at the tables dressed with cloths embroidered in lozenge designs, were a young man in evening dress, with watch chain of Venezuelan gold, an old man as dark as the interior of a tunnel, a tall, meager, brown girl talking with nervous gestures. The waiter serves oysters on the deep shell, uncut; sweet peppers of the color of a toreador's scarf; chicken, with rice made yellow by tempered coloring of peppers; Chile con carne, which is pepper with meat, not meat with pepper, and Valdepenas—in large cups, old, thick and cracked, for the proprietor, who smokes a cigar as big as a tree, has not his excise license—a sweet tempered wine of Spain which has the flavor of pepper. And the plates are so hot that you cannot touch them.—New York Times.

Recipe For Rheumatism.

The following recipe has been found specially effective in stubborn cases of rheumatism: One new egg well beaten, half a pint of vinegar, an ounce of spirits of turpentine, half an ounce of camphor. These ingredients must first be beaten together thoroughly, then put in a bottle and shaken for ten minutes, after which it should be corked tightly to keep out the air. In half an hour it will be ready for use. It should be applied three or four times a day, and for rheumatism in the head it should be rubbed on the back of the neck and behind the ears. It will keep for an indefinite time, and, in fact, is rather improved by age.—New York Mercury.

Their View of It.

First Nineteenth Century Girl—I never did have any opinion of Adam. A man who could excuse himself by saying, "The woman tempted me," had none of the instincts of a gentleman.

Second Ditto—But what could you expect of the first man. You know it takes three generations to make a gentleman.—New York Journal.

Easy to Find.

Miss Point Breeze—The man I marry must be rich.

Miss Schenley Park—Why don't you advertise? I often see advertisements reading, "Cashboys wanted."—Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph.

The Poplar as a Lightning Conductor.

A careful examination of the trees that are struck by lightning shows that over half of them are white poplar. From this fact scientists conclude that the poplar has some value as a conductor of lightning. This being the case, agriculturists are advised to plant these trees in the vicinity of their farm buildings. An additional suggestion is the attaching of lightning rods to two or three of the tallest of these trees. This will, it is stated, almost absolutely insure buildings against being destroyed by electric storms.—New York Ledger.

TO LAKE TAHOE.

A TRIP OF RARE INTEREST.

Passengers on west-bound overland trains of Central Pacific Railroad are respectfully notified that during the excursion season, commencing May 1st and closing October 1st, a delightful trip to LAKE TAHOE can be enjoyed (losing but one day in their journey) by taking the Express train of the Virginia & Truckee Railroad, leaving Reno at 7:10 a m, arriving at Carson City at 8:25 a m, where well-equipped stages leave promptly for Glenbrook, Lake Tahoe, connecting with Lake Tahoe steamer for Tahoe City, there connecting with Moody & Co.'s stages for Truckee, arriving same evening where connection is made with west-bound passenger train of Central Pacific Railroad. Through tickets, Reno to Truckee, by above route, for sale at Ticket Office, Reno, $6 00. East-bound passengers can leave Truckee early in the morning (Through Tickets for sale at Stage Office in Truckee) make the trip over the above described route, arriving at Reno same evening.

VIRGINIA CITY & THE COMSTOCK

Passengers may also take train mentioned at Reno for Virginia City, 52 miles, where an entire day may be pleasantly and profitably spent examining the famous Comstock Mines (now being worked to a perpendicular depth of 3,100 feet) with their massive hoisting and pumping machinery. Returning, see Time-Table above Round Trip Tickets for sale at Ticket Office Reno. aug3-tf

Leon Marks left for the state of Idaho last Monday, where himself and his brother, Arthur are heir to some property and he goes to attend to the settlement of the estate.

A number of visitors came up from Keeler last Saturday, among whom we note, J. A. McKenzie, Thos. Boland, W. M. Richards, Arthur Smith, E. A. Reddy and W. C. Smith. Messrs Richards, Boland and McKenzie returned the next day, while E. A. Reddy remained until Tuesday and Arthur and Billy Smith are still here.

The Odd Fellows.

The Brotherhood of Odd Fellows passed the 77th anniversary of the foundation of that order on the 27th of last month, and the lodge at Independence celebrated the occasion with an open entertainment to which the public had been invited. The pavilion had been engaged for the occasion and arrangements made to entertain the guests in a hospitable manner, which was surely done, judging from the gratification expressed by numbers of those present. A very fair audience had gathered at eight o'clock, when the following programme was so excellently rendered as to hold the undivided attention of the audience for a couple of hours,

Music ..... BAND
Remarks ..... P. W. FORBES
Recitation ..... MISS LOUELLA ROBINSON
Recitation ..... J. S. GORMAN
Solo ..... MISS IRMA WEBB
Recitation ..... MISS STELLA ROBINSON
Reading ..... MISS LENA THOMPSON
Music ..... BAND

At the conclusion of the programme ice-cream, coffee and cake were announced, to which all were invited to partake of and partake as long as they wished, and they did, for no pains were spared to make everything first-class. After the refreshments were served a large part of the crowd, mostly young people remained and the hall was cleared and dancing commenced. The music furnished by the Independence String Band was excellent was excelent and was responded to by the merry dancers until three o'clock Tuesday morning. So closed another event that will be remembered and looked forward to as the year rolls around.

Lectures

A series of lectures will begin at the M. E. Church by Prof. Morris, A. M., principal of Inyo Academy, on Friday, Saturday and Sunday May 15, 16, and 17. The first lecture to be free for all. The second lecture, on "The common man" which will be given on Saturday night, 25 cents admission, and on Sunday there will be a free will offering. One half of proceeds will be for insurance on church property, the balance for Prof. Morris's expenses. These lectures will be very interesting, and we hope to see them very largely attended. The subjects are as follows:

"The Wonders of Prophecy Historically Told." In this lecture the audience will be conducted through the ruins of ancient cities and nations, and view them as they now appear.

"The Comom Man." The common man in history, policies and social life. The world debtor to the common man—Illustrated by incidents and anecdotes that "bring down the house."

"The Signes Of The Times." A sensational lecture treated from a historical, political and philosophical standpoint.

THOS. H. NICHOLAS.

Central Committee Meeting.

A Bodie Mine On Fire.

When the day shift went went to work on the Standard mine at Bodie last Saturday morning they discovered the mine to be on fire. It is not known how the fire started or how much damage has been done underground, though the mine is supposed to be totally ruined. The new electric hoist has been burned and the shafts and tunnels are caving in. The miners are doing all in their power to put the fire out but the large number of shafts and cross-cuts make it impossible. The Standard mine employed as many men as all the other mines together. The last news received—last Tuesday—the mine was still burning.

Card of Thanks.

We desire to extend our heartfelt thanks to those who so kindly assisted us during the illness and death of our little daughter, Flossie.

MR. and MRS. W. B. MOORE.

The new Post-office at Georges Creek is now a regularly established office. It has been named Thebe. Miss Hattie Glade is postmistress, and the new office is situated at Mr. Glade's ranch, near the road in the vicinity of where the new school house stands. Messrs W. L. Hunter and H. Glade have been carrying the mail, which makes connection with every train at Citrus, the same as does the mail from Independence.

At the examination held in the Lone Pine school last week, Miss Adelina Meysan of Lone Pine and John S. Hunter of Georges Creek took the examination for graduation—both receiving a creditable standing. The closing entertainment of the year will be held next Wednesday night, to which invitation is extended to friends at Independence.

A week ago last Tuesday when the wind was blowing so hard a fire broke out on Mrs. Lubkin's place at Lone Pine and burned a stack containing 90 tons of hay and a barn. A stack containing 100 tons of hay a few yards from the one that burned remained unharmed. The fire is claimed to be of incendiary origin, and it is said a person down there was under suspicion.

The locust trees are commencing to blossom.

The Indian Medicine Man.

The law of the different Piute tribes in the western states, seems to be identical in regard to the obseqies over the death of a member, and the punishment of the "medicine man" who attended the patient during its last illness. Below, we publish an item from the Dayton Times, which shows the close resemblance to the same fate, met by a number of unfortunate "medicine men" of this vicinity, also the burning of the wickiup of the deceased, which will be remembered has occured a number of times during the past. However, a case of a member of the tribe being buried alive was never heard of here.

"Last week Thursday a Piute squaw died in Smith Valley from consumption She had been doctored for some weeks past by a Piute medicine man named Dr. Joe, a wellknown character in that section of the country. On the same day of the death of the squaw she was buried, and in accordance with the custom of the tribe the wickiup was burned. Furthermore a three-months-old baby of the squaw was buried alive in the same grave with its mother. The day after the burial of mother and child it was alleged that the husband of the squaw who died went to the wickup of Dr. Joe, the medicine man and shot him twice with a rifle and mashed his skull in with a club. It is also alleged that two other Indians were engaged in the killing of Dr. Joe. Complaint was made in this matter, and on Wednesday Sheriff Little left here to hunt the murderers and arrest them. It is said that the Indian, Dr. Joe, was shot last summer by an Indian called Jim Davis, because the latter's wife died under Dr. Joe's care. It seems that if a medicine man loses three cases of sickness that the decree is that he shall be killed, and Dr. Joe has only met the fate of many other medicine men of his tribe. The burying alive of the infant Piute however, is a cold-blooded affair, and the more horrible of the two crimes."

Estray Notice.

There came to my place at the "Tennessee Ranch," about 16 miles from Darwin, two horses described as follows: One brown, branded JE and vented JE on right hip and shoulder. One roan, branded C3 right hip. Taken up Sept. 10, 1895. The owner is hereby notified to claim his property and pay the charges upon the same, or I will, at the expiration of thirty days cause them to be sold according to law.

JAMES WOOD.

Tennessee Ranch, March 16, 1896.

H. Giles returned from Los Angeles yesterday morning. He came by the Keeler and Mojave stage and stood the trip very well. He has not fully recovered but is considerably improved.

Fred Holbert and his staff of cowboys arrived home from Los Angles last Monday evening. They lost a few head of cattle on the way down.

Mr. and Mrs. John Baxter returned from San Francisco last Wednesday. Mr. Baxter is somewhat improved in health.

Mr. and Mrs. F. E. Densmore are expected home the last part of next week.

Dave Johnson returned from San Francisco the first of the week.

A. V. Davidson is up and around town again.

State Chemist, California:

The ROYAL fulfils all the requirements. Our tests show it has greater leavening power than any other.

To Name Springfield's Four Hundred.

It has been seven years since a Blue Book was printed, and in that time there have been many social changes. Some have dropped out of the charmed circle, some of the buds have developed into matrons, while others are still serving as bridesmaids. And some of the plebeians have acquired property or gained culture and are knocking for admission at society's gate. All that is needed is official recognition. We need a Blue Book, the stars to indicate the grade of patricians. It will be well for the compiler to remain unidentified until the book has been published, and then, as in the previous case, to promptly leave town—to go far away and stay away. The Price & Lee company, which has been compiling dry and accurate directories of Springfield, has the temerity to announce that it is prepared to classify Springfield society. The preliminary circulars are out. Now is the time to get into line if you want a three star grade in the firmament of the Four Hundred. The Blue Book enumerator has not started on her rounds yet. Entertain and go to entertainments. The sheep and goats are to be divided, and it may again be seven years before another Blue Book division is made.—Springfield (Mass.) Republican.

Loie Fuller Is Coming.

Loie Fuller is coming over for a flying visit to America to show New York the wonders of her latest European success, "Salome." The other day she cabled W. A. McConnell, her agent, that she had accepted an offer of $10,000 for four weeks in New York, and would be over very soon. Mr. Stevens, her personal manager, will make the arrangements for Miss Fuller's engagement, which, it is supposed, will be played at the Olympia.

ROUND THE HEARTHSTONES.

Household necessities, cheer and warmth in winter, require the building of more fires. A cheerful warm fire-place is a gracious comfort, but the harm fire may do has no limit. Hearthstones have storied legends, and there are stories of how houses are burned down by carelessness. But it is because we have more fires that there are more burns and scalds, the treatment of which, to allay at once the torturning pains, requires something for immediate use. No household should be without it, and St. Jacobs Oil supplies the need. Used according to direction, it heals, soothes and cures and leaves no scars behind.

British Ambassadors Brought Eastern Potentates to Their Senses.

Lord Cromer, the artillery major who represents the queen at Cairo, would never have permitted an oriental potentate such as the sultan to keep him waiting for more than an hour in an ice-cold room, exposed to the sneers of the palace officials, as the sultan is reported to have done with Sir Philip Currie, who now lies ill a-bed in consequence of the cold which he caught. Lord Cromer is a tall, powerful man, and years ago, when calling upon the Sheik-el-Bekri, the supreme ecclesiastical dignitary of the Mohammedan church in Egypt, when the latter presumed to receive him without rising from his divan and merely negligently extending him hand, Lord Cromer, or Major Baring, as he was then, caught hold of ithe sheik's hand and with a sudden jerk pulled the astonished dignitary off the divan and on to his feet, squeezing his hand with such force that the Turk simply writhed, Baring all the while overwhelming him with compliments, his face wreathed in the most friendly of smiles. The lesson was a good one and after that no oriental dignitary, from the khedive downward, ever dared to render himself guilty of any lack of respect for the doughty major.

Nor would Lord Stanley, who while ambassador at Constantinople was known as the Great Eltchee, ever condescend to wait in the ante-chamber of the sultan, or of anyone else for the matter of that. He had far too lofty a sense of what was due both to his office and to the sovereign whom he represented, and on one memorable occasion when he had been kept waiting for a couple of minutes he deliberately stalked past the chamberlain and pashas and strode into the sultan's presence with his dragoman unannounced, the sultan being far too startled by the angry mien of the ambassador to protest against the intrusion.

In order to fully appreciate the slight put by the present sultan upon Sir Philup Currie, it must be remembered that the ambassador of a monarchial country is officially regarded as the personal representative of his sovereign and entitled to much the same treatment that would be accorded to the latter. Thus at European courts when there is any official banquet, the ambassadors and their wives (though not the mere ministers plenipotentiary) have a right to seats at the high table reserved exclusively for the personages of royal and imperial rank. The sultan has, therefore, been guilty of a piece of discourtesy not merely to Sir Philip, but to Queen Victoria herself, the indignity being rendered the more acute by reason of the fact that the ambassador was the bearer of an autograph letter from the queen to the sultan.—New York World.

CANNOT SWEEP OFF THE NICKEL

Simple Little Trick that Is Amusing Young People.

A lawyer who has an office in the New York Life Building was at a party the other night where the principal divertisement was tricks, one of which recalls to the lawyer's mind one he used to do when he was a schoolboy back in Maine. He called for a whisk broom and then, laying a nickel in the center of his open palm, offered it to any one in the party who would sweep it off with the broom. One of the conditions was that the broom must be held up straight and the coin swept with the ends of the broom straws.

"Oh, I can do that," said a young woman, and she took the broom and began to sweep at the coin. The harder she swept the tighter the coin stuck to the open palm of the lawyer's hand. One after another each member of the party tried to sweep off the coin, and it was an astonishing thing that the broom would not budge it.

Since then the trick has spread. The recent visit of Herrmann has caused a revival of interest in parlor magic, and at nearly every party some one shows the whisk broom and nickel trick, and it causes no end of wonder and amusement. Any kind of small coin and any kind of whisk broom are all that are needed to show the trick.—Kansas City Star.

This Countess Is a Brewer.

Russia is the proud possessor of a countess who is also a brewer, probably the only woman in Europe engaged in the business. She visited one of the Berlin breweries not long ago, and, after tasting its products, she stated that her own beer was not much inferior to the German product. When, a few days later, the brewer received some samples of the lady's Russian beer, he pronounced it excellent, and not inferior to the best Bohemian or German beer.

IT WORRIES MR. SAGE

A SMALL RAILROAD THAT CAUSES HIM MUCH TROUBLE.

Has Photographs Made of His Employees Showing Them Sleeping or Lounging. One Crew Camped by a Fire—Great Is the Poughkeepsie and Eastern.

Russell Sage is the proprietor of a railroad 40 miles long that gives him more trouble than all his other mileage and his millions put together. It is called the Poughkeepsie and Eastern, and, as its name implies, one end of it is anchored in what people who live there call the Queen City of the Hudson. The other end is at present located in a cornfield in the direction of Boston. Every time Mr. Sage gets out of sorts with the Vanderbilts or annoyed at the New York and New Haven people he stretches out his Poughkeepsie and Eastern a little and employs several men with pickaxes. Then his surveyors squint due east through theodolites and there is big talk about the Poughkeepsie and Eastern paralleling the Boston and Albany. Threats are also made of an extension west to Chicago.

Mr. Sage decided recently to take an active part in the operating of his pet road. This determination was due to information he received privately that things were not going on all right. The locomotive engineers were exceeding their allowance of three-quarters of a pound of coal per train mile, and were running freight trains over the whole length of the road in less than two days, the schedule time, or taking a week, just as caprice dictated. Then other irregularities were discovered. At the annual inventory, Jan. 1, three coupling pins and one chamois leather washrag were missing.

"The whole root of the difficulty is laziness," said President Sage. "These things will always happen to a railroad whose employees are not industrious. Discharge all the lazy men we have at present and get more."

But this was more easily said than done. They couldn't locate the lazy men. A freight crew would set out from Boston Corners with every appearance of wakefulness and energy, but just as soon as it got around a curve where the master car builder or the division superintendent couldn't see it, the engineer would run it on a siding and the crew would go to sleep or fall to picking blackberries. Mr. Sage at one time even thought of stringing wires along the track, so that he might learn where his trains were, but this involved a large outlay, and he racked his brain for some simpler plan.

He at length evolved a scheme by which the division superintendent, the master car builder and the track foreman should hide in a caboose and keep tabs on a sample train. But he found out that the division superintendent, the master car builder and the track foreman, who was one and the same person, had to attend to the turntable at Boston Corners and couldn't leave his work. The trains were getting slower and slower. The Cannon Ball express, which was put on as a menace to the New Haven company, occupied nine hours in running over the road. Then President Sage took counsel with himself and decided that something must be done.

He consulted a firm of detectives. He told them that he had ballasted and bonded the road in a style that brought it up to date, and he wanted them to find out how the employees spent their time, and why an up to date roadbed did not bring up to date speed. They gave him every assurance that they would bring the men to time.

Equipped with a camera, a detective who makes a specialty of railroad work went to Poughkeepsie. He knew that the presence of a passenger on a Poughkeepsie and Eastern train would excite suspicion, so he disguised himself as a tramp by a marvelously small number of artistic touches, and began to loiter along the grass grown line of the road.

The result of his labors, it is said, is an immense collection of cabinet photographs. They were taken by the instantaneous process, but they might just as easily have been done with a time exposure, for they show that employees of the Poughkeepsie and Eastern rarely move. Some of the pictures are so realistic that one who sees them can almost hear the conductors and brakemen snore.

One especially good view represents the "Lightning Bug" freight train, which brings maple sirup down from Vermont regularly every day, standing at ease on the track while her crew, camped round a log fire, are listening to the fireman, who is reading a dime novel. There are cobwebs on the driving wheel of the locomotive.

An interesting physiological fact brought out by the detective is that employees of the Poughkeepsie and Eastern have the rare faculty of sleeping while standing up. The pictures positively prove this. The open mouths and closed eyes eloquently describe a condition of sound slumber. When this convincing evidence that insomnia was not one of his maladies was shown to a brakeman, he said:

"That's the way I always act. I keep my eyes shut so as not to wear them out, and my mouth is one of those that falls open all the time and only closes when I remember to shut it. That's a habit I learned since I came to live in Poughkeepsie."

Mr. Sage does not know exactly what to do with his bundle of photographs. There is some talk of his pasting them up in the Poughkeepsie station as a warning to the employees in general. The men know all about the pictures and are very much alarmed.

"They took me eating a piece of pie," said a freight handler, "when it wasn't the dinner hour, and I should have been chucking pig iron on a flat car. Then they've got a picture of a political debate in the roundhouse, when the men should have been cleaning the engines."—New York World.

Success In Society.

The secret of success in society is a certain heartiness and sympathy. A man who is not happy in company cannot find any word in his memory that will fit the occasion; all his information is a little impertinent. A man who is happy there finds in every turn of the conversation occasions for the introduction of what he has to say. The favorites of society are able men, and of more spirit than wit, who have no uncomfortable egotism, but who exactly fill the hour and company, contented and contenting.—Emerson.

TOBACCO-TWISTED NERVES.

The Unavoidable Result of the Continued Use of Tobacco.

Is there a Sure, Easy and Quick Way of Obtaining Permanent Relief from the Habit?

Millions of men think they need stimulants, because their nerves are set on fire by tobacco. The persistent abuse to which the tobacco-user subjects his nerves cannot possibly fail to make weak the strongest man. Chewing and smoking destroy manhood and nerve power. What you call a habit is a nervous disease.

Tobacco in the majority of cases deadens the feelings. You may not think tobacco hurts you, but how are you ever going to tell how much better you would feel without it, unless you follow the advice of Postmaster Holbrook:

CURED 49 CASES OUT OF 50.

Holbrook, Nev., June 13.

Gentlemen—The effects of No-To-Bac are truly wonderful. I had used tobacco for forty-three years, a pound plug a week. I used two boxes of No-To-Bac and have had no desire for tobacco since. I gave two boxes of No-To-Bac to a man named West who had used tobacco for forty-seven years, and two boxes to Mr. Whiteman, and neither of them have used tobacco since and say they have no desire for it. Over fifty that I know have used No-To-Bac through my influence, and I only know of one case where it did not cure, and then it was the fault of the patient.

I was 64 years old last week. I have gained seventeen pounds in flesh since I quit the use of tobacco. You can use this letter, or any part of it, as you wish. Yours respectfully,

C. E. Holbrook, P. M.

You say it is wonderful. Indeed, it is. No-To-Bac cured over 300,000 cases just as bad. You can be made well and strong by No-To-Bac. Your own druggist guarantees a cure. Get our booklet, "Don't Tobacco Spit and Smoke Your Life Away," written guarantee of cure and free sample, mailed for the asking. Address The Sterling Remedy Co., Chicago or New York.

The Fighting Swiss.

The year 1512 saw the Swiss mercenaries at the zenith of their power, when waving Austria and France alike away from Milan, they installed therein the ruler of their own choice. In the same year they met the Landsknechts at the passage of the Oglio and Ticino, and, fording the rivers stark naked, beat them back without waiting even to dress themselves. A few months later they showed even more magnificent insolence when besieged by the French in Novara; throwing the gates open, they begged the enemy not to be at the pains of making a breach, but to walk straight in, "Donnez-vous donc la peine d'entrer." The French made no reply, except to hammer away with their artillery, whereupon the Swiss mockingly hung the breaches with sheets as sufficient protection against so feeble a foe. Shortly after arrived re-enforcements from Switzerland, which, without pausing to rest more than an hour after a long and hurried march, dashed out in disorder against the encompassing troops and dispersed them with terrible loss. "If we could only reckon upon obedience in our men," said the Swiss leaders, "we should march through the whole of France."—Macmillan's Magazine.

Hitchcock—Wilmot.

The Anglo-Saxon suffixes "kin" and "cock" were used as diminutive or endearing forms of personal names, just as the Normans used the suffixes "et," "ot," "en" and "on." Thus from Hitch, itself a diminutive of Richard, we get the surnames Hitchkin, Hitchcock, Hitchens and Hitchison. Any common baptismal name affords a number of such variants, which became fixed as patronymics or surnames. There are, for example, at least 15 different forms of William available for that purpose.

English forms: William, giving Williams, Williamson, MacWilliam, Fitzwilliam; Will, giving Wills, Wilson; Bill, giving Bilson; Willy, giving Willison.

Anglo-Saxon forms: Wilkin, giving Wilkie, Wilkins, Wilkinson; Gilkin, giving Gilkinson; Wilcock, giving Wilcox.

Norman forms: Guillaume, giving the surname Gillom; Guillamot, giving Gillamot; Guillon, giving Gillon; Guillot, giving Gillot, Gillotson; Guill, giving Gilson, McGill; Willett, giving Willet; Williamot, giving Wilmot; Willen, giving Willan, Willing.

Keep the Children Busy.

Almost every family can allow the children a tiny spot their very own for the planting of a few seeds or bulbs or slips, the care of which will give occupation and keep the children at home when otherwise they would plead to go somewhere or to have somebody come to see them.—Womankind.

$100 REWARD $100.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

GIRLS VALUE PURITY IN MEN.

The Exceptions, Who Wed Men of the World, Always Repent of It.

A young man writes to Edward W. Bok inquiring why so many girls seem to prefer the company of young fellows of slightly blotted character—men who have seen the world—and in many cases marry them, in face of the fact that their past lives are known to them. In The Ladies' Home Journal Mr. Bok, its editor, makes this reply: "Girls—that is, the right kind of girls—do not prefer the company of young men of this sort. Doubtless, you have come across instances where this rule has been otherwise; so have I. But it is all in the seeming, and not in the reality. Depend upon one thing—girls have as high an estimate of purity in man as men have of purity in woman.

"There are, of course, cases to the contrary, but these are few. Where girls marry men who are known to have led what is called a 'worldly life,' it is more generally due to a misunderstanding of facts or to ignorance than people imagine. There is a type of girl who finds a peculiar satisfaction in the conquest of a man who has 'seen the world' and then comes to her as the one woman of all her sex who can make him happy. This sometimes pleases her vanity and love of conquest, but she is not many years older before she discovers that she has satisfied those feelings at a very high cost.

"There is another type of girl who rather fancies a man who is what is called 'fast.' But that sort of girl is painfully ignorant of what is meant by that word as applied to a man. If she were not, she would be very apt to change the adjective to 'vulgar.' And as she matures she finds this out. It is only young men of upright lives who can hope to win the favor and love of girls of high motives, the girls who make the best wives. If, at times, girls seem to favor young men of another kind, the glamour is simply transitory. It is rare, very rare, that a girl's better instincts do not lead her to the higher grade of young men. An upright life never fails of reward, and of the highest reward, from the hand of woman."

An Error About Cats.

An error about cats, and a truly vulgar one, is that they lie on young children's breasts and suck their breath or suffocate them. Cats like to lie on the breast of a person they love, and are apt to show their happiness by now and then lifting their heads for a kiss or gently touching the face or neck above them with their paw; this sort of patting or stroking a beloved cheek or throat is one of the more human habits which dogs have not. Seeing one of our cats lying on her master's chest when he was asleep on the sofa, I understood how the notion had taken root; then, too, cats are luxurious and fond of warmth, and may sometimes share a baby's crib or cradle for that reason, as dogs certainly do.—Temple Bar.

THE UNKINDEST CUT OF ALL.

As Shakspeare says, is to poke fun or sneer at people who are nervous, under the half-belief that their complaint is imaginary or an affectation. It is neither, but a serious reality. Imperfect digestion and assimilation of the food is a very common cause of nervousness, especially that distressing form of it which manifests itself in want of sleep. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters speedily remedies nervousness, as it also does malarial, kidney, bilious and rheumatic ailments. The weak gain vigor speedily through its use.

with severe pains across my shoulders, and great distress. I had violent nausea which would leave me very weak and faint, difficult to get my breath. These spells came oftener and more severe. I did not receive any lasting benefit from physicians, but found such happy effects from a trial of Hood's Sarsaparilla, that I took several bottles and mean to always keep it in the house. I am now able to do all my own work, which for six years I have been unable to do. My husband and son have also been greatly benefited by Hood's Sarsaparilla—for pains in the back, and after the grip. I gladly recommend this grand blood medicine." MRS. # COL. JOSEPH L. FOLLETT.

One of Sheridan's Commanders Saved by Paine's Celery Compound.

Col. Joseph L. Follett of New York has a national reputation.

At the age of 21, Col. Follett enlisted in Battery G, First Missouri Light Artillery, and soon rose to its command. At Lookout Mountain, his was the only Battery that reached the summit.

Since the war he has devoted himself to mechanical engineering, and has invented several important improvements on the sewing machine, and a bicycle that promises to be one the surpises of next season.

The tension on the nervous system of an inventor, kept up for months and months, seriously weakened the health of a busy brain worker like Col. Follett, and his constitution, which even the hardship of war did not weaken, threatened to succumb to nervous exhaustion.

What Col. Follett has to say in regard to his restoration to health, cannot fail to carry great weight. In a letter to Wells & Richardson Co., of Burlington, Vt., he writes:

"When suffering from mental exhaustion and a generally disorganized system, and overwork, I used Paine's celery compound.

"The compound acted like a charm on my bowels and kept them in fine condition, and I experienced great relief from my brain troubles.

"I have not used Paine's celery compound for six months, but I shall when in need of a tonic and general regulator of the system. I have recommended it to a great many, and every one who tried it got relief.

"It is the best general remedy I ever used or knew anything about."

When the nervous system has become weakened from any cause, Paine's celery compound builds it up as nothing else can. It makes people well.

People in every walk of life have reason to be grateful to Prof. Phelps of Dartmouth, the eminent scientist who discovered Paine's celery compound. He understood the peculiar needs of the nervous system; he knew that the backache, headache, sleeplessness, loss of appetite, and disordered blood all mean that the nerves are weakened and inadequate to the demands upon them. The experience of thousands has proven all over this broad country that only Paine's celery compound will give health to the nerves, and through them to the entire body.

Colleges conferred upon Dr. Phelps their highest honors for his invaluable investigations in medicine, but all this seems insignificant in comparison with the chorus of gratitude that has gone up all over the world from men, women, and children, who have outgrown weakness and the lack of health by the use of Paine's celery compound, the most wonderful nerve and blood restorative.

KING OF TIGRE.

King of Tigre, comrade true,
Where in all thine isles art thou?
Sailing on Fonseca blue?
Wearing Amapala now?
King of Tigre, where art thou?

Batting for Antilles' queen?
Saber hilt or olive bough?
Crown of dust or laurel green?
Raving love or marriage vow?
King and comrade, where art thou?

Sailing on Pacific seas?
Pitching tents in Pima now?
Underneath magnolia trees?
Thatch of palm or cedar bough?
Soldier singer, where art thou?

Coasting on the Oregon?
Saddle bow or birchen prow?
Round the isles of Amazon?
Pampas, plain or mountain brow?
Prince of rovers, where art thou?

Answer me from out the west!
I am weary, stricken now;
Thou art strong, and I would rest;
Reach a hand with lifted brow!
King of Tigre, where art thou?"
—Charles Warren Stoddard.

FANNING'S HEART.

Miss Irwin was very busy. She was handling a difficult assignment which by rights should have been given to one of the men reporters, and so it happened that she remained after every one else had gone to dinner, and for some time the walls of the city editor's room had listened to the unusual sound at such an hour of a bad stub pen scratching over thin brown paper.

Finally the monotonous scratching was interrupted by the opening of a door, and Fanning, the police reporter, hastily entered. Miss Irwin paused in her story long enough to look up.

"Oh," she said, "it's you, Fanning. Been to dinner already?"

"No, ma'am, not yet. I'm looking for Scranton. Hasn't come back yet, has he?"

"Not yet. Anything I can do for you?"

"No, thanks. I just wanted to see him about a story—that little chap that was hurt. Read about it, didn't you? Scranton's interested. The little chap's dying. I've just come from the house. The doctors all say he'll die tonight, and I wanted to tell Scranton. I am so worried. Pshaw, I'm worried sick. I"—He paused, ran his fingers through his hair and looked embarrassed.

"Come, now, Fanning, tell me all about it," said the thoroughly interested Miss Irwin.

"There ain't much to tell. Oh, you mean what I'm worrying about? Well, to put the whole thing in a few lines, I'm afraid he might not die in time for me to get my story for the morning's paper. Just think of what I'd lose—such a beautiful story."

Miss Irwin looked shocked, and Fanning saw it. His blue eyes took on a resolute expression, but the muscles of his face did not move, nor did his red cheeks grow the least bit redder. He lit a cigarette and said doggedly:

"Yes, ma'am; so long as he's going to die—they said he won't live through tonight—he might have enough consideration for me to arrange it in time. Just my luck to get scooped." And he knocked off some cigarette ashes.

Miss Irwin gazed at the boy in astonishment.

"Why, you cruel, cruel fellow," she exclaimed, in a disappointed tone, "I didn't think you were that sort."

It was Fanning's turn to look disappointed. "You seem to think, because I talk as I do, that a police reporter hasn't any feelings at all," he said, in an injured way. "Maybe we've got more than you think. Now, there ain't anybody sorrier than I am for that little boy. Why, his mother and sister think I'm the best friend they've got, because if I hadn't said my say, the bully who hurt the little chap wouldn't have been held at all. I fixed him all right enough, though; made things pretty lively at the police court, didn't I? Well, I guess.

"Say, if he would only hurry up and die in time I could write the most elegant and touching story. You just ought to see him. Everybody takes so much interest in him, and folks send him books and toys and jelly and all sorts of good things to eat. When I saw him this evening, the bed was covered with playthings, but if you'll believe it, he didn't seem to care for 'em at all. The only thing he noticed was a bunch of roses somebody had sent him. He wouldn't part with 'em, and when I saw him lying back there with the flowers against his cheek, I thought how pretty it would be for me to have him die with them in his hand. Say, wouldn't that be picturesque? I won't bother you, though, any longer. If you see Scranton, tell him about it; he'll be interested."

The door closed, and Miss Irwin was again alone. She couldn't take up the train of thought she had been pursuing when interrupted, and she still had the shocked look she assumed at the beginning of Fanning's conversation.

"Such a hardened fellow," she muttered, "and yet at heart I really believe him to be what he says he is."

The next morning Miss Irwin scanned the papers, but saw nothing about the boy. The evening papers contained long accounts of his life and death. Miss Irwin felt rather sorry that Fanning, with all his cruel, kind heart, had been scooped. She was sure his account would have surpassed those she had read, and she sighed as she thought of the roses. They had not been mentioned at all.

Several days passed. She was anxious to meet the police reporter. Curiosity caused her to wonder what he would say. Finally the chance came. She happened to be waiting for a car when Fanning passed. She stopped him.

"By the way, Fanning, I saw you were cheated out of your story about the little boy."

"Yes, I was. Luck's dead against me."

"What time did he die?"

"Three a. m. exactly. Just too late for me to get in even a line. I was there when he died."

"Poor, dear, little fellow! How did he die?"

"He died on space rates, ma'am."

Miss Irwin thought that she had become used to the reporter's peculiar style, but his reply was too much for her. When she regained her composure, she said:

"I mean, did he know anybody? Was he conscious to the last?"

"Oh, yes. He just opened his eyes; then he shut 'em again, and he opened 'em again and smiled real sweet at his mother and sister and me, and then, and then he—he just died nice, real nice.

"Say," he touched Miss Irwin on the arm and laughed, "what do you suppose? His mother thinks so much of me she asked me to pick out the coffin; said she didn't know what would be appropriate. I selected a little beauty. Say, you ought to have seen him in it."

Miss Irwin was becoming vastly interested in Fanning. He was so different from any one she had ever met before. Then, too, he puzzled her. His conversation was certainly of a "don't care" style, but somehow she couldn't believe him to be as heartless as he seemed. His story about the death of the little boy had affected her greatly; so much so, in fact, that she went to see the sorrow stricken mother.

"Oh," said the mother, between her tears, "you are from The Morning Herald, you say? It is so kind of you to come. My poor little boy thought The Herald was the best paper in town; he often sold it. If all the people on The Herald are so good and kind as you and Mr. Fanning"—

"Fanning!"

"Yes, do you know him? I don't know what on earth I would have done in all my trouble if it hadn't been for him. He's got the kindest, most generous heart. 'The Lord loveth a cheerful giver,' but then, Mr. Fanning can afford to give, and"—

"Fanning afford to give!" ejaculated Miss Irwin. "Why"—

"It's a blessed thing to be rich, and to have so much power on a great big paper like The Herald," continued the elder woman. "Of course, if he had been poorer off than he really is, I wouldn't have let him do what he did."

"May I ask what he did?" inquired Miss Irwin.

"Yes, indeed, and I'm only too glad to tell you about it. I believe in mentioning good deeds. Mr. Fanning's paper took such an interest in my little boy that it printed long columns about him, and then Mr. Fanning had the man who injured my boy put in jail, and then he sent him flowers — beautiful roses, the ones he was buried with—and Mr. Fanning even bought the coffin with his own money. When I told him not to do that, he laughed and said that was nothing—he could afford it."

"So," mused the lady reporter, as she walked away, "Fanning has spent all his hard earned savings on the flowers and coffin. He's a dear, good boy."—Omaha Herald.

Always Room For "Isers."

"The kind of men I want to hire," said a newspaper publisher the other day while talking to a friend, "are seldom to be had. No matter what their lines of business 'isers' (a word that rhymes with scissors) are never out of work and always get good money. I want some isers."

"Isers?" exclaimed his companion. "What on earth are isers?"

"To explain what they are," replied the publisher, "let me tell you a story of a 'want ad.' Once a man wished to employ for his circus an acrobat who could throw triple somersaults. So he put a 'want ad.' in the paper. In reply to the advertisement he received 50 letters. Together with a friend he read them over. Some of the letters he put in a pile by themselves. They were the ones that read something like this:

"DEAR SIR—You advertise for a man who can throw a triple somersault. I used to throw triple somersaults and think that after a little practice I could do it again. I'd like a trial.

"The other letters were put in another pile and ran something like this:

"DEAR SIR—I am a good acrobat; but, while I never have thrown triple somersaults, I think with a little practice I could do it. I'd like to have a trial.

"'Well,' said the circus man, as he shook his head sadly, 'there are 50 letters from 50 acrobats. Twenty-five of them are "has beens," 25 are "going to bes," but there ain't an "iser" in the whole lot.' Now, I want 'isers,' and so does every other business man, but they are all employed."—New York Tribune.

Mistaken Kindness.

One of the first resolutions which are formed by men and women who are succeeding in life, that is, as measured by the only standard in use nowadays, increasing their possessions far beyond their actual needs, is that they will put safeguards around their children; the hardships which they themselves contended against shall never, if they can help it, be encountered by their offspring. They not only coddle themselves, indulge themselves with unaccustomed luxuries and spare themselves all avoidable physical exertion, but they believe this course to be the right way to live, and that if it is good for them, it is good for their children. They do not understand that character is formed under the pressure of the compulsory hardships and self denials of youth, just as they forget that health is not a gift or an accident, but the reward of abstinence and of hard work under natural conditions, perhaps continued through several generations.—Frederick Tudor.

First Electric Light In a Theater.

It is believed that the first electric light installed in an American theater was a Jablochkoff candle, used as a focusing lamp in the old California theater, in Bush street, San Francisco, in 1878. The managers of the theater at that time were Messrs. Barton & Hill, General Barton and Frank Lawler. The play was "Antony and Cleopatra," Rose Eytinge and Cyril Searle taking the leading parts. Mr. A. H. Reece was the engineer in charge of the work.

Time has worked a complete revolution in theatrical lighting, and today there is not a theater in the United States which could dispense with the electric light.—Electricity.

DO SNAKES CHARM?

THERE ARE PROS AND CONS TO THIS QUESTION APPARENTLY.

A Tale From Texas Which Supports the Affirmative, but There Are Naturalists Who Say No—Claim That the Snake's Victims Are Self Hypnotized.

A gopher snake at Escondido has been the cause of much earnest discussion among local naturalists. The question discussed was, "Do Snakes Charm or Hypnotize Their Prey?" One of the naturalists had the unusual but fortunate experience at Escondido of happening upon a large gopher snake just as the reptile was about to overcome a trembling cottontail rabbit and envelop the animal in its deadly coils. For some time the naturalist watched the snake's movements.

It was within 10 or 12 inches of the apparently fascinated rabbit. Silently and almost imperceptibly the snake had wormed its way nearer and nearer to its victim. Its eyes glistened with an intense brightness. Not a movement did it make which might alarm the timid rabbit. The forked tongue, which to the eye of a human being is so repulsive and intended to be terrifying, appeared to exert an entirely different influence upon the mind of the innocent rabbit.

This darting tongue either excited the victim's curiosity or caused the animal to so concentrate its mind on the snake's tongue as to throw that mind into a hypnotic condition of such strength that it could not break the spell and run away from impending death. The forked tongue darted out of the snake's mouth almost as regularly and rapidly as the needle of a sewing machine rises and falls in the cloth. The lithe body crept nearer and nearer. The rabbit was motionless. Its eye was fixed on the piercing eye of the snake. Even the waving of the wind kissed shrubs about the rabbit failed to break the spell, and softly and slowly grim death in snake form wreathed its folds about the creature. Then was the spell broken.

But the strong coils of the snake were in position. Never a rabbit lived that could break that embrace of death. Realizing at last the terrible peril, the terrified rabbit struggled vainly to escape, and as the rings of the snake drew closer about the frail form so tightly that breathing became difficult the rabbit uttered a despairing cry almost human in its intenseness and sound. It was the rabbit's last earthly utterance. An extra twist of the cruel coils and poor bunny was no more. Lungs, heart and bones were literally crushed. The snake did not relax the pressure for fully ten minutes. Unwinding itself, the snake dragged the prey under an adjoining bush for dinner.

To the naturalist who watched the capture of the rabbit it appeared as if the snake had certainly fascinated the animal. As a gopher snake is not poisonous and has no well developed fangs its only means of killing prey is by constriction. In order to catch an animal it seems almost necessary for the snake to fascinate the victim.

Other naturalists claim that snakes do not possess the power of fascinating either birds or animals. One man who has given the matter much study remarked that "no error is apparently more rooted in the human mind than that which attributes to snakes this peculiar power of fascination." By this power they are said to be able so to paralyze their victims that the birds or animals are rendered utterly incapable of movement and wait for the attack of a snake or even go forward to meet it in fear and trembling, but without any power of retaliation.

Now, any one who watches the behavior of small animals placed alive as food in the cages in which snakes are kept in captivity in the hope of seeing this marvelous power in operation will be grievously disappointed. Chickens, rats, guinea pigs, rabbits, all move about with an utter absence of fear of the snakes. My belief is that it is possible to account for the popular belief that snakes possess a power to fascinate for several reasons. An observer may come on the scene and find a number of birds mobbing a snake just as they will mob an owl or a buzzard. The dashes of the bird toward the snake and their fluttering round it may easily be put down to the effect of the snake's glance, while they are in reality merely attempts of the birds to drive off the intruder. A mother bird whose young are attacked will almost certainly behave in this way and may herself fall a victim, not to the power of fascination in the snake, but to the force of her maternal feelings.

It may be the mobbing of the snake by the companions of a victim that has been seized or of a mother whose nest has been robbed; it may be simply the effect of poison already injected before the observer has come upon the scene, or it may be simple curiosity. In ninety-nine cases out of a hundred one or the other of these causes has been at work. What, then, of the hundredth case, and what about the fascination exercised on man, cases of which have undoubtedly been recorded? The explanation lies in the probability that it is a case of self hypnotism.

It is an error to suppose that will power has anything to do with the effect. The matter has been taken up scientifically by the medical profession and it has been found that the hypnotic state of sleep or trance, or whatever it may be termed, can be produced by looking fixedly at the operator or at a coin or at the tip of one's own nose. It is not necessary to go into the question of how the result is brought about, but there is a physiological explanation. What happens then in the hundredth case is that the man or the animal may be self hypnotized by gazing fixedly at the snake, the subject being thus thrown into a sort of trance, making no attempt to move out of danger unless roused by some exterior influence.—San Diego Cor. Chicago Times-Herald.

Wan's Big Damages.

The Lake Erie and Western Railway company has been made defendant in a damage suit at Lafayette, Ind., the sum claimed being very large and the petition peculiar. The plaintiff is Hosea B Tullis. Briefly, Mr. Tullis alleges that on Feb. 10 last year he was in the employ of the defendant company as a brakeman. There was a collision. Tullis was thrown a considerable distance, alighting upon the hard ground. He has ever since been an invalid. His left side and hand are paralyzed. He demands that the courts give him $50,000.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

POPULAR PHRASES.

ORIGIN OF SOME OF THE CATCHWORDS THAT EVERYBODY USES.

We Have Taken Some From the English and Invented Very Many Ourselves—How We Came to Adopt Some of the Phrases Which Are In General Use.

Mention has been recently made of the disputed origin of the word "teetotal," claimed by two inventors, one living in England and the other in America, and each of whom may have hit upon the word independently and for the different reasons assigned. To curious minded persons who like to know the whys, whens and wherefores of everything the origin of popular catchwords and figures of speech is an interesting subject.

The word "machine," as we use it politically, is another which, like "teetotal," is of doubtful parentage. In the days of the old volunteer fire companies, which in large cities were potent factors in local politics, the phrase "to run with the machine" came into common use, and it meant that a man so spoken of was identified with the political coterie of the fire company with which he trained. The famous Boss Tweed began his career in New York "running with the machine" as a volunteer fireman. Yet the term as we now employ it was used in England long before. The Duke of Wellington, in a letter to a friend in 1845 deploring the increasing influence of popular agitation on the action of the houses of parliament, said: "Such is the operation of the machine as now established that no individual, be his character, conduct in antecedent circumstances and his abilities what they may, can have any personal influence in general." We may have derived our term "the machine" from our old volunteer fire company days, but in the England of Wellington's time there were no fire companies exerting any political influence.

That much overworked word "crank" gained universal vogue in connection with Guiteau's assassination of President Garfield, but it was long before that applied by the late Don Piatt, who claimed to be its inventor, to Horace Greeley, the purpose of it being to liken the famous editor to the crank of a hand organ, which is forever grinding out the same old tunes. The word, as we have now come to apply it, means much more and worse. It implies a condition of mind verging upon insanity, and this has given rise to the erroneous notion that it has its origin in the German word "krank."

The word "dago," now commonly applied to Italians all over the country, came originally from Louisiana, where it at first referred only to people of Spanish origin, but was later applied to Italians and Portuguese as well. The word is a corruption of "Diego" (James), which is a common Spanish name, San Diego being the patron saint of the Spaniards.

Another word of incessant employment in American speech is "dude," with its feminine complement, "dudine." This may have come to us from the old English word for clothes—"duds," in earlier times spelled "dudes."

Thackeray writes of one of his characters: "Her dresses were wonderful, her bonnets marvelous. Few women could boast such dudes." Shakespeare, in "The Merry Wives of Windsor," writes of a "bucke of dudes," meaning a basketful of clothes ready for washing. Its present day literary currency dates from February, 1876, when the word appeared in Putnam's Magazine. But a famous New York clubman, Mr. Hermann Oelrichs, claims the credit of first starting it as a popular term of contempt or ridicule for an overdressed person. He claims that a youth of this type who passed by the Union club window with a mincing step provoked himself and another clubman to hum together an accompaniment to the youth's walk, thus, "Du, da, de, du du, du de," and that he remarked "Good enough; dude is the proper name for it," and that thus the word was born.

The words "jingo" and "jingoism" are also of disputed derivation. We all know about the English music hall song which set the word going with a new meaning in 1877, but the original coinage of the term "By jingo!" is quite doubtful. In the Basque language the word jingo means God, and it is widely believed that "By jingo!" was a form of oath with which the Basque sailors familiarized the English sailors and, through them, all English speaking people. But others believe the word is a corruption of St. Gingoulph. It is one of the oddities of popular wordmaking that the term "jingoism," as now used, is a complete travesty of the sentiment of the song from which it was taken. A jingo, either in England or America, is now set down as a man spoiling for a fight, eager for war at any cost. But the original music hall song, with the jingo chorus, expressed exactly the opposite sentiment—a desire for peace. It began with "We don't want to fight," and its fiercest war note was struck in the declaration that if they had to do what they would rather not, they had plenty of men, ships and money.

Speaking of "Brother Jonathan," there is no doubt about its origin. When General Washington went to Massachusetts to take command of the Revolutionary army, he found a great lack of ammunition and other supplies. He turned for aid to Governor Jonathan Trumbull of Connecticut, and got it, and in many emergencies of that period he used the phrase, "We must consult Brother Jonathan on the subject." The expression became nationally current, and it stands as the American parallel to "John Bull."—Baltimore Sun.

A man that loves his own fireside, and can govern his house without falling by the ears with his neighbors or engaging in suits at law, is as free as a Duke of Venice.—Montaigne.

A CONJURER'S TALE OF WOE.

Confederate Produced a Handful of Change Instead of a Marked Dollar.

Carl Hertz, the illusionist, was talking of some of the accidents that sometimes spoil the art of the conjuror.

"It was in Nashville," he said, "that I experienced a real knock down blow. I was performing the well known trick of passing a marked coin into the center of an uncut orange; at least that's what a good many people thought I was doing. I used a silver dollar, and emphasized the trick by passing the coin into the pocket of some boy whom I had enticed on to the stage.

"I will openly confess that the boy had to be a confederate, and that the marked dollar had its fellow in one previously prepared by me. One night, as I was entering the theater, I looked around for a likely youth to aid me in my double dealing. I picked a boy and promised to pass him in if he would follow my instructions.

"'I am a conjurer,' I said. 'I want you to put this dollar in your right hand trousers pocket. I'll get you a seat in the front row. When I ask for somebody to come on the stage, you must come. Then I will ask you to produce the dollar.'

"The boy promised everything, and, after making arrangements for him at the door, I left him. When I was ready for the dollar trick, I saw my young confederate sitting open mouthed in the front row. I had prevailed upon another member of the audience to lend me a dollar marked exactly as was that I had given to the boy.

"I passed that borrowed dollar into the orange, cut the fruit open, and out dropped the coin. Then I went on:

"'And now, ladies and gentlemen, I will perform a still more difficult feat. I have passed that dollar into an orange. Now I will ask some member of the audience to step on the stage, and, without going anywhere near him, I will pass the same dollar, marked, as you have seen, into his right hand trousers pocket.'

"True to his bargain, the boy stepped to the stage. I stepped opposite him and asked:

"'Now, sir, have you ever seen me before?'

"'No, sir,' was the answer.

"'I have here a dollar,' I continued. 'I am going to pass it into your right hand trousers pocket. One—two—three—go!'

"I made the proper magician's pass and smiled confidently upon my audience.

"'Now,' I said to my assistant, 'put your hand into your right hand trousers pocket and give me the dollar.'

"The boy looked a bit sheepish, but he dived his fist down. Then, to my unutterable horror, he produced a handful of silver and said:

"'I've only got 90 cents of it left, sir.'

"I went out in a hurry and took a drink."—New York Times.

A MAN FOR AN EMERGENCY.

Surprising Experience In a Car of a Boy Who Was Headstrong.

A poorly dressed woman with a boy about 9 years old boarded one of the Union Trolley company's cars in White Plains avenue recently. There was no vacant seat, and she grabbed a strap in front of a young man and prepared to hang on. The young man got up and tipped his hat to her. Quick as a flash the boy dropped her hand and leaped into the seat on his knees, taking care to wipe his muddy feet on the clothing of the passengers on either side. The young man looked first at the woman, for whom he intended the seat, and then at the boy. The woman shook her head and said:

"Poor boy! I guess he's tired. He can have it, sir."

The young man looked from one to the other again. He shifted about uneasily for a moment. The other passengers in the car giggled. That decided him. Holding to a strap with one hand, he reached for the boy with the other and got him by the nape of the neck. He lifted him clear of the seat and held him dangling and kicking in the air. The woman was about to protest. Then she thought better of it and sat down in the vacant seat.

"Madam," said the young man, throwing the boy at her, "here is your boy."

"Thank you, sir," she said. "He is a bit headstrong, it's true, sir."

The boy looked astonished. He whimpered a little. The woman patted him on the head, and there wasn't a peep heard from him from that time until the Harlem bridge was reached and the crowd got out.—New York Sun.

The Mullein Plant.

We stopped to look at the downy content of that sober plant, the mullein. Many plants had the central leaves folded continuously one about another until a sort of large, gray green bud was formed, and in one of these buds a bee was taking an afternoon nap, snugly sheltered from the air, which was growing somewhat chilly. We thought that any prudent insect might find a comfortable winter home by asking the mullein to open its velvet leaves just a little and then to fold them tightly around the wanderer! And while we were speaking a bluebottle fly went humming past us, as if to say he had no mind yet to be asking shelter of any one!—Edith M. Thomas in St. Nicholas.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.

FRIDAY, MAY 8 ..... 1896

The City of Mexico bids fair to gain two important results from the construction of its $13,000,000 tunnel. The one aimed at when the tunnel was begun was the drainage of the vast morass upon which the city rests; but with the completion of the work will come the development of such great electrical power that the street car lines may be supplied with it and the manufacturing industries of the capital relieved from the disadvantage of having to use $20 coal for fuel. An American syndicate has bought the right to utilize the water that will plunge through the tunnel, and use it to run dynamos. It is estimated that 10,000 horse power will be at its service. Within the next few years it is probable that other cities than the Mexican capital and other countries than Mexico will begin to show a proper conception of their industrial opportunities with the respect to the electrical power which the free use of water under pressure might provide them. It is astonishing that the United States, for example, has permitted millions of money to be spent for fuel when enormous water power was at the same time available and runing to waste. A demonstration was made twenty years ago that Niagara Falls could supply electricity for every manufacturing industry in New York and so it could, but between that time and this enough money has probably been expended in the same territory for coal in the production of steam to pay the running expenses of the State. What is true of Niagara Falls and New York is true, in a less but still potent degree, of every mountain lake and its contiguous region in the United States. It is especially true of California, the two great mountain ranges of which hold the power, within their rocky reservoires, to turn every wheel on the neighboring coast and a million besides. We shall see results in time, however—perhaps after Mexico has shown what can be done by confining water under pressure with electrical appliances—and then we shall all wonder why it has taken so long to hit upon the simplest of all expedients to create industrial values and prosperity.

The police courts are, if anything more corrupt and more infamously conducted than the Police Department. The one infamous adjunct of organized society plays into the hands of the other and between the two we have an interesting game of battle door and shuttlecock with decency and justice for the shuttlecocks. The Police Department and the Police Courts are completely under the domination of the criminal and vicious elements of society and no criminal fears them or needs to fear them unless a more powerful criminal influence is seeking "to down" him.—[S. F., Town Talk.

New Yorkers are justly in mortal fear of their cable cars. The city has but two lines of cables, and up and down Broadway the cars follow each other like a funeral procession. They run faster than the cables of San Francisco, and the great noise of the narrow street prevents them being heard. Every day there are serious accidents, and infirm people and children are regular victims. Transportation in New York city is a great problem, and the underground tollery system is being agitated.

Two Chinese vegetable gardeners brought to town today big loads of potatoes to sell. When the white laborer comes to town he doesn't have anything to sell and not many of the white farmers either."—[Ex.

A bicycle trust, with a capital of ten million dollars, is the latest project of capitalists. It is proposed to make Toledo the headquarters of the trust. Twenty factories are already located there. The demand for wheels this year exceeds all expectations, and it is reported that the entire output of all the factories in the United States is already already contracted for.

The Fresno Watchman furnishes encouraging news from the new oil region in the Coast Range foothills near Coalinga, southwest of Fresno. Wells are being rapidly sunk, some already producing generously, and now there is a movement on foot for a refinery

The annual profits of the Suez Canal amounts to $8,000,000, and the ships using it save $10,000,000 a year after paying the tolls. Its great success will stimulate the building of ship canals during the coming century.

There is great activity in the oil region of southeastern Kansas, and much is doing both in boaring of new wells and in the development of wells already put down to oil. Some 2,000 wells will be opened in that region within the next six months.

It seems that Paderewski's female admirers fairly waked the ship and adjacent shores up when the musical wonder quitted America. It is said that his pouch contained a quarter of a million more than when he landed on our shores.

There have been so many divorces and remarriages in the Vanderbilt set that the children cannot tell whether they are playing in their own back yard or not.

In the investigation of the management of the San Francisco Almshouse an unusual amount of rotton work was discovered.

Various Tastes.

Manifold have been the forms of recreation indulged in by distinguished lawyers. Dyer, 1589, we are assured, when ruffled by any annoyance in the discharge of his duties, sought solace by playing upon the virginals; Fitzjames kept up an old college friendship with Wolsey when he was a simple country parson near Yeovil, and was actually engaged in the brawl at the fair, when his reverence got drunk and was by and by set in the stocks by Sir Amyas Paule. Erskine was a great lover of animals. A favorite dog attended him to all his consultations when at the bar, a pet goose followed him as he walked about the grounds, and two leeches which had been applied to him when he was once dangerously ill, called Home and Cline, after the names of two celebrated surgeons, were kept in a glass bowl and exhibited to his particular friends.

Stowell gloried in Punch and Judy. Camden, who had an undignified habit of gartering up his stocking while counsel were most strenuous in their eloquence, loved cider and novels. Wickens amused his leisure by bookbinding. Jessel catalogued funguses, while Marsh was singularly apt in picking locks with a piece of wire, an art which he had acquired by the frequent loss of his keys when at the bar.—Temple Bar.

A Royal Romance.

That romance is not entirely wanting even in royal marriages is shown by the pretty story which precedes the engagement of the King of Portugal. Prince Carlos, who was known at that time as the Duke of Braganza, was on the way to Venice to celebrate his betrothal to the Archduchess Marie Valerie, daughter of the Austrian emperor, when, upon his arrival in Paris, he received news that her imperial highness had changed her mind. The prince was unwilling to return without a bride, and sought the advice of the Marquise de la Ferronay an old friend of the family. Her ladyship showed him the picture of a young girl, who, she said, was rich, talented and equal in rank. "I will have her, whoever she may be," exclaimed Carlos. "Where can she be seen?" "According to this morning's paper," replied the marquise, "her royal highness, the Princess Amelie of Orleans, arrived yesterday in Nice." Three days later the duke and princess met for the first time, and shortly afterward their betrothal was announced.

Ornaments in India.

In India, for the mass of the people, the purchase of ornaments is almost the only form of indulgence to which a man who has made a little money treats himself. Ordinarily the man who has saved a few rupees does not change the nature of his food or the style of his clothing, nor does he invest in articles of furniture.

What he does—if he is of a cautious and saving nature—is to put his rupees in a hiding place, but if he is inclined for show he indulges his fancy by putting gold or silver ornaments on the persons of his wife and children.

These ornaments are the very last things to be parted with on a reverse of fortune, and even in the lowest social depths they are not put on the market until the last piece of coined money has vanished and no household utensils of brass or copper are left with which to obtain a coin.

The Repeater's Charitable Motive.

"I am certain," said the election manager, "that you voted in another ward early this morning."

"How come you ter think so, colonel?"

"Because I saw you."

"You's sho' er dat?"

"Quite sure."

"Well, colonel, ter tell de truth, I did vote in de Fust wa'd, but I only done it out er charity."

"Out of charity?"

"Yes, suh. You see, hit wuz dis way, colonel: De man what I repsde polls had done bin dar sence daylight, en business wuz so slow, en he look so lonesome dat I des give him one vote ter start de ball a-rollin, dat's all."—Chicago Times-Herald.

There is in souls a sympathy with sounds, and as the mind is pitch'd, the ear is pleas'd with melting airs of martial, brisk or grave, some chord in unison with what we hear is touch'd within us, and the heart replies.—Cowper.

He Approved the Book.

Chauncey M. Depew was telling a story about a police superintendent in one of our inland cities. The man was a sharp, shrewd fellow, who worked his way up from the ranks, with little or no education. A boy was arrested at the station by one of his officers, and in due time brought before the superintendent. The officer said that the boy had run away from his home in the east and was going west to fight Indians. The superintendent asked if any weapons had been found on the youthful desperado. The officer replied that the only thing found on him was a book. The superintendent continued: "These dime novels are doing more to injure boys' characters and to drive them from home than anything else. Let me see it."

The officer handed him the book. He took it and opened it. Then he said: "This is the Bible—eh? I have heard a lot about this book, but I have never read it. Wait until I see what it says." He began to read slowly and laboriously. After 20 minutes' silence he took his feet down from the desk, placed his glasses back in the case, and said kindly to the boy, "Well, my little man, I am surprised that with a book of this kind in your possession you should have decided to run away from home." Turning to the officer he said in a matter of fact way, "There are some really good things in it."—New York Tribune.

Stray Notes From The Lake-side Reporter.

EDITOR INDEPENDENT:—Enclosed find a few May day items, some of them got wet as it rained and snowed and hailed and so fourth in and around Keeler and vicinity on Wednesday just the same as if it was winter instead of spring lingering in the lap of summer.

Mr. George White, the boss carpenter of Hawthorne, and Mr. Geo. D. Calvert, the genial and good looking mayor of Tibbetts are among the latest arrivals in Keeler. They came down for their health and are improving rapidly.

The latest social club started in Keeler is called the "Entre nous." Several social dances have been held and the meeting held at the residence Mrs. L. F. Wrinkle last week was a very enjoyable affair, dancing was kept up until midnight when a sumptuous supper was given by the hostess.

Mr. R. C. Irvine, representing Joe Poeheim, the tailor, came in on the last Mojave stage and went to Darwin and returned Wednesday en route to Lone Pine and upper Inyo.

It is reported that a very fine entertainment and dance was given at Lone Pine on Tuesday evening in honor of some Mexican or Spanish holiday. Several parties went up from Keeler by private conveyance.

At a meeting of the Lone Pine Canal Company, held at Lone Pine on April 25th Mr. J. A. McKenzie was elected President of the board of directors; Thos. Boland, treasurer; W. M. Richards, secretary. The following directors were duly elected: J. A. McKenzie, Thomas Boland, E. Robinson, M. S. McKenzie and D. Holland.

Mike Martin of Modock came in on Wednesday's stage and will go to Independence for medical attendence on Thursday, as there is some serious trouble with one of his ears, he being almost deaf from some unknown cause.

A new resturant has been opened in Keeler. There seems to be quite a number of extra men and laborers in town at present and it is rumored that some more dwelling houses will soon be built.

Railroad avenue from one end of the city limits to the other in Keeler, is being graveled by the Railroad empany. The main line and the side tracks are being ballasted with gravel and leveled up.

Supt. R. J. Laws went to Keeler last Monday, returning to Hawthorne on Thursday's train.

One of our citizens was up at Hawthorne lately, and being a lover of melody, kept the nickel-in-the-slot music box at the "Nucleus" playing popular airs without intermission. An old fellow in the garb of a miner, who had been listening intently, at last approached the Keelerite and asked "Do it play anny Irish choons?" On being told that it did he said "Well thin give uz Pandeen O'Rafferty or the Cruiskeen Lawn." "Haven't either of them" replied the man from Keeler. "But here's an Irish air either by Pat Ford or O'Donovan Rossa, I forgot which," and he slid in the disc of the stabat mater. As the beautiful strains of Rossini's masterpiece came from the instrument the miner reverently took off his cap and remained silent until it was finished. "Oi tought I wor in church" he at length remarked, "such peaceful music as thot wor niver kimposed by no wild spalpeen loike Donovan Rossa, but may be 'twor tom Moore who did it, sure an he did kimpose some illigant verses and choons 'off in the stilly noight' wor wan, an the 'young may moon' another, an the devil knows what all besi-lse. Ah but he wor a great man, 'tom Moore,'" and the old fellow walked away scratching his head and extolling ireland's famous bard.

Mechanically yours,
E. L. ECTRIC.

A Small Scare

A fire alarm was turned in last Saturday evening about 9 o'clock by some one who thought he saw a fire in Chinatown. The department responded in great haste, accompanied by the implements usually carried on such occasions, and was at the scene ready for action with the greatest of promptness. Had they consulted a Chinese calander at any previous time, however, they might have found a festival billed for that specific period, which would probably have threw light enough on the occasion to have made it less exciting. As it was, when they arrived they found the festivities proceeding, and everything working in perfect harmony, as Wun Lung and his assistants had arranged for. The arrangements consisted of a bon-fire, back of which was arranged two rows of candles placed in new moon fashion, then two empty grain bags spread nearly within the circle, one of which was covered with eggs, meats etc. The department remained for a few minutes to see if anything new would happen, then returned to satisfy the curiosity of those who did not go down.

J. H. Hammond and four other reform leaders of the recent uprising in the Transvaal, plead guilty to treason, and were sentenced to death. The latest news however, is that the sentence has been commuted to a short term of imprisonment and a heavy fine. Hammond was the only American.

The town of Cripple Creek, Colorado was completely wiped out by fire last Thursday and over 2000 people made homeless. The fire is supposed to have been started by incendiaries.

San Francisco had another costly fire last week, the paint works of W. P. Fuller & Co. burned, causing a loss of one hundred and twenty thousand dollars.

Pastor Brown, the San Francisco preacher, who received so much noteriety a few weeks ago has resigned from his San Francisco charge and gone East.

The Shaw of Persia was shot and killed by one of his subjects last week.

Mining Notes.

Spencer & Gould, Hopkins Creek, Plumas County, now light their hydaulic mine by electricity, by a novel method. They tapped the main pipe near the monitor, inserted a 1-inch gas pipe reduced to ⅛ inch nozzle, the tiny stream playing on a 6-inch Pelton wheel attached to the dynamo, and though not a very extensive proposition answers all purposes.

A recent decision from the office of the Secretary of the Interior is to the effect that an application for mineral patent must, at the time of application, or within the period of publication, file a certificate of the surveyor general showing an expenditure of $500 on the claim, and if the certificate so filed does not show such expenditure, additional time to make further improvements cannot be granted, but the entry allowed on such proof must be cancelled.

John M. Reynolds, acting Secretary of the Interior, has affirmed the decision of the Commissioner of the General Land Office to the effect that a placer claim may be taken up by legal subdivisions and does not need to be staked or marked on the ground. The decision is an important one, as it interprets the law regarding the location of placer claims. It is held that the locator is not required to mark the boundries of his claim when it it is located on surveyed ground.

A Johannesburg, South Africa, dispatch of April 29th represents the Standard and Digger's News as saying "Barney Barnato, the Kaffir King, is very bitter concerning the sentences imposed upon Rhodes, Hammond and others at Pretoria, and is showing his resentment by closing all his mines and selling all his landed properties in the Rand. The people are paralyzed at the prospect, as the closing of the Barnato mines will throw thousands of men into the already overflowing ranks of the unemployed."

Regarding the taxation of unpatented mining claims, Attorney-General Fitzgerald is of the opinion that they can be assessed and unpaid taxes held as a lien on the land to be collected in full by the State after the issuance of United States patent. That will doubtless do till another attorney-general files a contrary opinion. Meanwhile prospectors and locators can refuse to pay the taxes so assessed on unpatented claims and take the chances of having to pay the taxes later on. It is largely a matter of individual opinion as to whether payment of taxes on undeveloped unpatented prospects or claims shall be made or refused.

Helena, Montana, advices are to the effect that a war is about to be waged between the Eastern and Western producers of lead. The Eastern men are short many thousands of tons of the metal, and to be able to cover themselves at a figure not entailing a loss they are endeavoring to force down the price. The Western men, on the other hand, have plenty of lead and want the price up. To defeat the alleged scheme of the Eastern producers to lower the price of lead much below what it now sells at, the producers of Montana and Idaho are making arrangements to form a copartnership to greatly control the production of the same in their States. The producers of Missouri have been written to asking them to join the partnership. The Montana and Idaho producers claim that, with the co-operation of the Missouri producers, they can defeat the Eastern men. Unless the price of lead goes up materially before the date set for the opening of the war, the output of Montana and Idaho will be curtailed.—Mining and Scientific Press.

The Comstock Silver mine was discovered in 1859 by two men, named James Fennimore and Harry Comstock. However, neither of these mem realized the value of the "find," as it is said that the former sold out his part of the claim for a pinch of gold dust and a mule, and Comstock parted with the whole of it for a comparatively small amount. In the course of seven years, $70,000,000 worth of silver was taken from this lode, and at one time it was considered the greatest silver mine in the world. There are now other mines that are surpassing it.—Rustler.

The fire in the Standard Con. Mine at Bodie has been gotten under control and extinguished. It started in the 400 foot station and set fire to the shaft which was considerably damaged both above and below that station. By bulkheading, the fire was kept from the drifts and stops, but it will probably take $20,000, if not more, to repair damages.—Chronicle-Union.

The Standard cyanide has started up, for the summer's run.

The Standard's new cyanide down the canyon is progressing slowly owing to the recent storms.

Angrew Arrill has the contract for hauling the tailings to the Standard's new cyanide, at 32½ cents per ton.—Bodie Miner.

Col. Sutherland went to Virginia last week to examine the Kinkead crushers now running on low grade Comstock ores. Mr. Sutherland contemplates putting up two or three mills in Candelaria when the mines start up.—Bulletin.

Over at the Hirsh mill there is an experienced mechanic at work making necessary repairs and changes. At the mine more men are put on every week as the mine is developed. The main ledge is at present running down on an incline and towards the east.

Darwin and Keeler are both growing more lively all the time. The last news from there we learn: Arcularius is hauling for Lane. McSweeny is hauling for Frank Fitgerald, who has recently struck a good body of ore. J. J. Gunn is not shipping any ore from Modock at present. Frank Sorba is working a prospect near Lane's mine at Darwin. Jed. Frye is also working a claim near the same place. At the Defiance there are three men at work. There are about thirty men at work at Darwin, and Chas. Anthony is expected back to-day. E. C. Garlick has considerable machinery at Snow's Canyon, and Neil McLean is expected with another load soon.

Lectures.

A series of lectures will begin at the M. E. Church by Prof. Morris, A. M., principal of Inyo Acadamy, on Friday, Saturday and Sunday May 15, 16, and 17. The first lecture to be free for all. The second lecture, on "The common man" which will be given on Saturday night, 25 cents admission, and on Sunday there will be a free will offering. One half of proceeds will be for insurance on church property, the balance for Prof. Morris's expenses. These lectures will be very interesting, and we hope to see them very largely attended. The subjects are as follows:

"The Wonders of Prophecy Historically Told." In this lecture the audience will be conducted through the ruins of ancient cities and nations, and view them as they now appear.

"The Comom Man." The common man in history, policies and social life. The world debtor to the common man—Illustrated by incidents and anecdotes that "bring down the house."

"The Signes Of The Times." A sensational lecture treated from a historical, political and philosophical standpoint.

THOS. H. NICHOLAS.

A QUEER FREAK.

A Sheep That Was Born With Its Head Upside Down.

An interesting freak of nature which has engaged the attention of most prominent veterinary surgeons of Philadelphia is the property of Messrs. Weldy & Hingley. It is a sheep perfectly sound in every respect except that the head is curiously twisted out of its normal position, being turned completely upside down, the crown resting upon the animal's breast. The freak, which answers to the name of Twist, was recently imported by the present owners from Nova Scotia after a great display of red tape on the part of customs officials.

Twist is a twin, and he and his mate were both born with this curious malformation eight months ago. The mate died, but Twist was reared on the bottle by the children of the sheep farmer. Now he feeds himself, but he can eat his food only from the ground, and he has to push his head down between his fore legs to do it. He can't lift his head above his breast at all. Dr. S. J. J. Harger of the veterinary department of the University of Pennsylvania was much interested in the animal, and as soon as the weather grows warm enough to permit the shearing of the thick wool which covers the sheep he will lecture upon the case.—Philadelphia Record.

THE BICYCLE OUTPUT.

This Year's Production Expected to Exceed by Far That of 1895.

It is expected that the output of bicycles in this country for 1896 will far exceed that of 1895. It is said that American manufacturers are prepared to produce this year, if they can get, when they need them, sufficient supplies of steel tubing and other material, 800,000 bicycles. The output last year was, approximately, 450,000 bicycles. It is thought that the actual production this year will reach 650,000. It is more likely to exceed that number.

Few wheels are imported, not enough to cut any figure here. Our exports are still not great. American manufacturers have been too busy supplying the home demand to make much effort to supply other markets, but they continue to increase. We are selling more bicycles in Mexico and more in South America, principally in the Argentine Republic. Our exports to Europe are also increasing, the greater number going to France and Belgium, though we sell some wheels in other continental countries and in Great Britain. In Paris enough American bicycles are now sold to make them a factor in the trade.—New York Sun.

A Long String of Brownies.

At the present time there are owned and controlled by the railroads and private car companies of America nearly 1,250,000 freight cars, or, in other words, enough cars to make two continuous trains reaching from Boston to San Francisco, with an engine for every forty-five cars. Of this total number probably not over 100,000 are in constant movement day and night.

Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness, without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, then laxatives or other remedies are not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, then one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction.

Young at Fifty.

HOW A METHODIST MINISTER CARRIES HIS YEARS.

Rev. William Young, of Oswego, Tells a Reporter His Secret of Good Health.—Will Surely Benefit Everyone Who Follows His Advice.

From the Times, Oswego, N. Y.

Probably no man is better known or more highly respected in Oswego, N. Y., than Rev. William Young, of the Methodist Church. Mr. Young has not a Conference appointment, but holds a responsible position with the Oswego City Savings Bank, where he has been a trusty employe for the past twenty years.

In the spring of 1894 Mr. Young looked as if his time on earth was limited and that he would be laid at rest with the great majority before snow covered the ground. But, instead of failing as was predicted, he soon gained a more healthy look and appeared stronger. As the months went by this improvement continued, until now he is as rugged and apparently as healthy as a young man of thirty, although his gray locks denote a more advanced age. A Times reporter, determined to find out what had made this great, and it might be said phenomenal change, called upon Mr. Young at the bank and put the question direct and received the following reply:

"In turth I am changed a man, and I owe my present good health to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. In the spring of 1894 I was all run down and had commenced to think that my time had come. I had to be prescribed for by physicians, and although I received temporary relief, the same old trouble came back again and I was worse than before. I had no strength or appetite, and physically I was in a miserable condition. After my work I would go home, but the general lassitude which hung over me left me without any ambition, and when I would go to the table to eat, my appeitte failed me and I would have to leave without taking hardly any nourishment. My kidneys were also badly affected, and I was in utter despair. One day, here at the bank, I happened to pick up one of the local papers, and my eye fell on an advertisement of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. The advertisement gave a description of a man who, afflicted as I then was, had been cured by using Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I was not a believer in that kind of doctoring, but concluded as a last resort to try a box of the pills, making up my mind that if they did not help me I certainly would not be injured any. Going to a drug store, I purchased a box of Dr. Wiliams' Pink Pills and commenced taking them according to directions. Very soon after I began to feel better and I saw I had made no mistake in trying the pills, and before the first box was emptied I felt so much improved that I immediately purchased another. I had taken seven boxes of the pills, and at the end of last summer I felt I was entirely cured and discontinued their use, but always keep a box handy if occasion requires. I am now entirely cured. The lassitude has left me, my kidneys are all right and my appetite—well, you should see me at the table. I am a new man again, and instead of feeling like a man of fifty, which is my age, I feel like a youngster of twenty, and give Dr. Wililams' Pink Pills the full credit for this great change. I have recommended these pills to several of my neighbors and acquaintances who have been relieved of their complaints."

William Young, being duly sworn, deposes and says he is the gentleman referred to in the above interview, and it is true in every respect.

WILLIAM YOUNG.

Subscribed and sworn to bfeore me this 25th day of May, 1895.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are for sale by all druggists, or may be had by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y. for 50 cents per box, or six boxes for $2.50.

Old English Music.

Long before the stream of Norman minstrel art sacred music was exercising a beneficial influence. The early British church possessed sacred music, but this was gradually driven out before the onward march of that new church music which Augustine brought with him from Rome (A. D. 597). The Gregorian music (evolved by Pope Gregory out of the Greek tetrachords and some existing Ambrosian chants) was heard and loved wherever Augustine and his monks built a church. By its means a deep impression was left upon the minds of those who heard and joined in it, but it is curious that we miss altogether the ecclesiastical flavor in the earliest examples that have come down to us of English music during the first quarter of the thirteenth century.

The free and uncontroled secular music was the first to reflect itself in permanent manuscript form. Church music per se was not progressive; the church tones for the "service" and "mass" music were fixed, and only a heretical offense was the outcome of tampering therewith, but no such restrictions hampered secular music.—Blackwood's Magazine.

Information For the Teacher.

The teacher was asking questions—teachers are quite apt to ask questions, and they sometimes receive curious answers. This question was as follows:

"Now, pupils, how many months have 28 days?"

"All of them, teacher," replied the boy on the front seat.—Utica Observer.

MODERN CANDLES.

THEY ARE GREAT IMPROVEMENTS OVER THOSE OF FORTY YEARS AGO.

The Unit of Light Has Been of Inestimable Service to Mankind—It Is a Mistake to Think That Gas and Electricity Have Entirely Snuffed Out the Candle.

Now that candles have again come into use as a means for lighting reception rooms where gas is considered too hot and electric lights too glaring, comparisons are being made with the candles of today and those of the long ago. He is not a very old man who still remembers the malodorous "tallow dip," six to the pound, that he bought at the grocery or perhaps may have helped to make in a domestic way on Saturdays when at home from school.

It is but a few years since candle molds were a very important and necessary part of every household, and yet so completely are they now banished to the limbo of forgotten and useless things that there must be thousands of young people to whom a pair of snuffers and a candle mold would prove undoubted curiosities. They were not very pleasant to the nostrils, those old fashioned tallow candles, their illuminating power was not good, and their need of constant snuffing was indispensable, and though the fingers were the handiest of snuffers one was very apt to get badly smudged in the course of an evening.

Yet the world stumbled along with no better light than that for 18 centuries and accomplished considerable things on the way. Great scholars were made by saved up candle ends, great volumes written and the world enlightened, even if the writers and teachers groped a great deal.

The great performances of Garrick and Siddons were given behind footlights of tallow candles, and the candle snuffer was one of the most important of supers in the theater of the olden time. "Without a candle snuffer," says Goldsmith of a play he had seen, "the piece would lose half its embellishments."

In those days "early to bed and early to rise" was a maxim that had much more significance, for it was necessary to get more out of daylight than in this era of gas and electricity. Candles have always occupied an important place in public worship. In the old times Christmas was called the Feast of Lights, because many candles were used at the feast, while the custom of setting a candle at the head of a dead person after being "laid out" is still a practice.

But if people think that candles are not much used nowadays they are mistaken. There are still several candle manufactories in New York. A very large export business is done here, chiefly to the West Indies and Central America. In the United States sales are principally in the western states. The mining region takes large quantities, for no light but candles is used in gold and silver mining.

Candles are also used for church purposes, at country hotels, and to some extent in families. Many of the people of the east side, newly come to the country, use candles in preference to oil, being accustomed to candles and afraid of the oil. Although it is not a great while before they are won over to the use of oil, there are always thousands of others who, for the first few months of their being here, shun oil as they would a deadly poison.

No branch of industry has undergone the change that candle making has in the last 30 years. Formerly it was merely a mechanical operation. Anybody could make candles and almost everybody did.

Now it is a scientific industry, bringing to its aid the resources of chemistry. Formerly a candle was a greasy, noisome thing that one usually handled with disgust; now it is artistic and refined and can be handled without the least offense. The wick is so prepared that the combustion is complete, and snuffers have long been banished. An ancient candle maker could only work with materials already provided by nature, so that he had to use fats, with all their impurities.

The modern candle maker by chemical process removes impurities, which leaves him nothing but the hard and white fat for his candles. Fat changed by this process is called stearine, and from this material are made the star and stearic wax candles. These are extremely hard and are sometimes called adamantine, do not grease the hands and give a soft and pleasing light. Spermaceti and wax candles are also made.

The candle has ever remained the unit of light. Sometimes you hear of a light, say gas, being of 25 candle power. The standard is a spermaceti candle burning at the rate of 120 grains of sperm per hour. There are candles, too, which are made of paraffin, but no candles are used so extensively as the star or stearine.

The great improvement in the manufacture of candles dates from the investigations of the French chemist, M. Chevreul. He discovered that the fat of tallow was separable from the oil, and the result of the process was two valuable products—stearine and glycerin. Those who have used the candles of the past can scarcely realize that candles can now be shipped to warm climates. In former days a merchant would as soon have thought of exporting skates or snowshoes to Havana as a cargo of tallow candles. They would have all melted into an indistinguishable mass going across the gulf of Mexico. But such candles as are made now can be used in the hottest climate in the world.

Candles, however, are not a cheap light. A box of them will cost as much as a barrel of oil, and yet the barrel of oil contains nearly 80 times the illuminating power of the box of candles. The only great advantage of the candle is its safety.

Oil and gas are much cheaper. Where candles are used danger from fire is reduced to the lowest.—New York World.

Evarts' Paradox.

An amusing instance of an orator unable to resist a neat paradox was presented in a speech made at a banquet given when President Hayes and his cabinet were in Omaha. Evarts was delivering a most eloquent eulogy of the west and concluded one of his famous interminable sentences in these words: "I like the west. I like her self made men, and the more I travel west, the more I meet with her public men, the more I am satisfied of the truthfulness of the Bible statement that the-wise-men-came-from-the-east!"—Exchange.

NIAGARA FALLS AMBITIOUS.

Steps Taken to Provide a Harbor For Deep Vessels.

A bill has been prepared at the suggestion of the Niagara Falls chamber of commerce, which will be presented to the New York legislature, providing for the amendment of the city charter so that the city can bond itself for $100,000 to build docks, wharfs, slips, piers and basins and retain title in the property thus acquired. It provides that the name of the port be changed from that of "the port of Suspension Bridge" to "the port of Niagara Falls." Plans and surveys have been made. Owing to the fact that three basins can be provided for a harbor, with a dock and wharf frontage of about five miles, the United States government will be asked to make an appropriation large enough to deepen the channel thereabout so that the heaviest draft lake steamers can go to the docks.

Elevators for grain, coal trestles and lumber docks will be constructed and a bid made for the traffic in the products in addition to ore and other freight.

PRESIDENTIAL HATS.

Why Is It That They Are Always So Shabby and Worn?

Why is it that all presidents seem to wear the shabbiest of silk hats? President Cleveland and Mrs. Cleveland were driving in Sixteenth street in Washington on Sunday afternoon last, and the president's hat was all that could be desired for a St. Patrick's day parade. It was rumpled and dusty and of an ancient block.

This singularity in the matter of silk hats prevailed with Grant, Garfield, Arthur and Harrison. It was especially marked in Arthur, who was the pink of perfection and fashion in his dress.

The only possible excuse for it is that a president, and for that matter a cabinet officer—but especially the president—is expected while in Washington and elsewhere when he appears as president to wear a silk hat. It is in constant use. It is worn all day and on all outdoor occasions. It would require half a dozen new silk hats a week for a president to appear constantly in shiny and glossy headgear.—New York Sun.

Four Cousins Wed.

A peculiar double wedding occurred in the Quicksand neighborhood of Kentucky recently. Mr. Floyd Carpenter married Miss Martha Carpenter and Mr. George Carpenter married Miss Aizelia Carpenter. All of the young folks are cousins. Among other guests at the wedding was Uncle Billy Carpenter, who was the great-grandfather of all the contracting parties.

THE RECALL OF CAMPOS.

The retirement of General Campos must be regarded as an acknowledgment that his campaign has been a failure, and it is no longer possible for Spain to pretend that the Cuban insurrection is simply a mutiny on the part of a lot of lawless and turbulent persons.—Baltimore News.

If Spain's greatest general could not succeed, what may we expect from generals of less reputation who are about to enter Cuba for the first time, at a moment when the island is practically overrun by insurgents and the defense of Havana is Spain's serious task?—Hartford Post.

It is impossible to misunderstand the meaning of the retirement of General Martinez Campos from the command of the Spanish forces in Cuba. The general has frequently been criticised as having been too conciliatory, and this is the sole reason why his demission was demanded by the Havanese loyalists. Sympathy in favor of the Cuban insurgents is intense in this country, and nothing would more quickly inflame American public opinion to the point of compelling the intervention of the United States in Cuba than the conduct of a barbarous war at our very doors.—Philadelphia Record.

Dinner Wines.

In serving wines with a course dinner sherry should be served with soup. With the fish chablis or sauterne is nearly always served, and with entrees have claret. Champagne, hock or moselle comes with the roast. Port wine is usually served with the cheese course and burgundy with the dessert. Serve red wines at the same temperature as the room. White wines should be slightly chilled, but never put ice into wine. Do not fill a glass to the top. Serve the least celebrated wines at the commencement of a dinner, reserving for the last the choicest vintages.—New York Sun.

Women Overseers of the Poor.

Why it is desirable that women be elected on the board of overseers of the poor in the towns of Massachusetts needs no argument. That is the kind of work in which good women are naturally interested and active, and their special fitness for such service does not admit of challenge. It will be for the public good in any community to put at least one competent woman on all such boards.—Springfield (Mass.) Republican.

What might be done if men were wise! What glorious deeds, my suffering brother, would they unite in love and right, and cease their scorn of one another.—Charles Mackay.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An Elixir of Life.

T. A. Slocum Offers to Send Two Bottles Free of His Remedy to Cure Consumption and all Lung Troubles.

Nothing could be fairer, more philanthropic or carry more joy in its wake than the offer of T. A. Slocum, M. C., of 183 Pearl Street, New York. Perfectly confident that he has an absolute remedy for the cure of consumption and all pulmonary complaints, he offers through this paper to send two bottles free to any reader who is suffering from lung trouble or consumption, also loss of flesh and all conditions of wasting. He invites those desirous of obtaining this remedy to send their express and post-office address, and to receive in return the two bottles free, which will arrest the approach of death. Already this remedy, by its timely use, has permanently cured thousands of cases which were given up, and death was looked upon as an early visitor.

Knowing his remedy as he does, and being so proof-positive of its beneficent results, Dr. Slocum considers it his religious duty, a duty which he owes to humanity, to donate his infallible remedy where it will assault the enemy in its citadel, and, by its inherent potency, stay the current of dissolution, bringing joy to homes over which the shadow of the grave has been gradually growing more strongly defined, causing fond hearts to grieve. The cheapness of the remedy—offered freely—apart from its inherent strength, is enough to commend it, and more so is the perfect confidence of the great chemist making the offer, who holds out life to those already becoming emaciated, and says: "Be cured."

The invitation is certainly worthy of the consideration of the afflicted, who, for years, have been taking nauseous nostrums without effect; who have ostracised themselves from home and friends to live in more salubrious climes, where the atmosphere is more congenial to weakened lungs, and who have fought against death with all the weapons and strength in their hands. There will be no mistake in sending for these free bottles—the mistake will be in passing the invitation by.

THE JESUIT FATHER IN CHINA.

A Fearfully Narrow, Barren Life and Its Mental Effects.

Up summer and winter before sunrise, he reads the matins and his day's work is often done, says Blackwood's Magazine. Sometimes he reads the angelus and vespers; usually they are undertaken by the native catechist. Perhaps in the course of the long morning Ah San or Ah Si will present himself and pour forth complaint about a buffalo and a trampled padi field; or he may be called to adjudicate in what should be an action for a divorce. Sometimes of a morning he sallies forth, his yellow pigtail coiled around his head and an enormous satchel slung across his back, with a store of iron shot and wadding for his rickety muzzle loader, and if he is lucky will bring back a pigeon or two, or even a pheasant, to supplement the inevitable pork or fowl and rice.

The mail comes in once a fortnight and a day slips by unnoticed, thanks to home letters and a dozen numbers of La Croix, where, squeezed between the latest miracle and the life of some worthy saint, the doings of the outer world may be found recorded in a ten line notice on "a l' Etranger."

Sometimes an afternoon is whiled away in curing the rank tobacco of the place or in brewing rice wine or malt beer—because ten years of solitude have taught him to do things for himself—and when he has no such pastime on hand, he gets through the day absorbed as one hopes in his little mediæval library of religious books—lives of the saints and sermons and essays.

Then is it wonderful that even a mind as broad and gentle as his should in constant journeyings on the one road have worn a rut for itself, deep sunk and gloomy as the traffic channeled paths of the loess land in the north, till, when a rare glimpse of the outside world does break upon his view, his dazzled eyes can see nothing but trees walking, schismatics and Freemasons, Jews and atheists, spiritualism and table turning, with the fiend himself in a fiery cloud over all?

Dakota has 426 persons engaged in manufactories, the annual output of the factories being $10,710,855.

AN IDLE SCAVENGER.

The bowels act the part of a scavenger, inasmuch as they remove much of the debris, the waste effete matter of the system. When they arrow id e, neglectful of duty, it is of the utmost importance that they should be impelled to activity. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters effects this desirable object without griping them like a drastic purgative. The Bitters is also efficacious for malaria, biliousness, dyspeptic and kidney trouble.

Tramp (at dentist door)—Please, sir, could yer fill me teeth this morning? Dentist—With silver or gold? Tramp—Cold roast turkey would do.

$100 REWARD $100.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

NEW WOMAN IN LITERATURE.

Jeannette Gilder Gives Her Ideas Concerning the Talked of Creature.

The new woman of the novelist is merely one of Dr. Max Nordau's degenerates. She is the creation of a writer who is hysterical and degenerate, and the world takes her as something that really exists. To be sure, there are plenty of women with "pasts" and with "yearnings," and there always have been and probably always will be, but I doubt if any woman outside of an insane asylum talks the rubbish about spiritual impacts, tells that "we are tones of one chord," and about the "vile slavery" of marriage, as do the women of Miss Pendered and Mr. Grant Allen. Writers of this sort do not represent the women of the day any more than the painted women of the streets represent the women of good society.

The janndiced writers of "The Yellow Book" cannot be expected to give us pictures of healthy lives. Their tastes run to worm eaten fruit. They have no liking for that which is red with the hue of health. They prefer the yellow hue of decay. Dr. Nordau is quite right when he calls it disease. The heroines of "The Yellow Book," of "Discords" and of "Wreckage" might have been taken from Lombroso's study of the female offender. If they exist outside of their creator's brains, their cases will be found recorded in scientific studies of criminology or in the ordinary police reports.

The new woman as I find her outside of the pages of fiction is an industrious, healthy minded, healthy bodied young person, with a certain amount of independence, who cares more for out of door sports than for indoor follies, and who if she has work to do does it and does not waste her time in telling about it. Her spirits run high over the adventures of "A Gentleman of France," she laughs and cries by turns over "Trilby" and thinks "The Dolly Dialogues" great fun, but for "Yellow Discords" and the like she has no use.

I am happy to say that little of the hysterical literature of the day originates in this country. It is almost entirely of English origin. Some of our younger writers have tried their hands at it, but they do not take to it naturally, and it is fast going out of fashion.

There always will be a handful of people who like erotica, but I think there has been a turn in the tide which even at its highest never swamped the writers of purer fiction. Rudyard Kipling and Mrs. Humphry Ward have many more readers than Grant Allen and Mary L. Pendered, and in this country our writers of clean fiction are the most popular.—Jeannette Gilder.

THE DAUGHTER.

There's one I miss—a little questioning maid
That held my finger, trotting by my side,
And smiled out of her pleased eyes open wide,
Wondering and wiser at each word I said.
And I must help her frolics if she played,
And I must feel her trouble if she cried;
My lap was hers past right to be denied;
She did my bidding, but I more obeyed.

Dearer she is today, dearer and more;
Closer to me, since sister womanhoods meet.
Yet, like poor mothers, some long while bereft,
I dwell on toward ways, quaint memories left,
I miss the approaching sound of pitpat feet,
The eager baby voice outside my door.
—Augusta Webster.

NO ONE KNEW HIM.

"I am very sorry, George, but this was really what she said."

These were the words of Florence Larkin to her brother. George had intrusted her with that difficult commission—to find out why Gertrude was off and on with him—why she was sometimes so cordial and sweet and sometimes so distant. And poor Florence had to explain to George that Gertrude had virtually said that he was too commonplace. She could not marry a man that nobody knew and nobody talked about. He was good, he was successful, he was kind, he was everything that Miss Edgeworth would require in one of her novels, but he did not attract people's attention. Nobody ever heard of George Larkin.

After Florence had explained this in the minutest way possible twice, George seemed to understand what she was talking about.

"Does she want to see my name in the newspapers?"

"I should not say that," said Florence.

"Does she want me to ride down Broadway in plate armor and nail on the doors of Trinity a notice that she is the prettiest girl in the world?"

"She did not say so," said Florence.

"Does she want to see me more?"

"I should think you would do better if you went there less," said Florence.

"If all she wants is to have me talked about, she shall have her way!" And George Larkin flounced out of the room.

Ten days after, as Gertrude Clark came down, rather late, to her breakfast, the servant brought in a pile of letters on the salver. Gertrude's little sister counted them; there were 23. "What in the world has happened?" said she.

The little sister cut them open, and Gertrude read:

DEAR MISS CLARK—I think you know Mr. George Larkin. Will you have the kindness to put his address on the note inclosed?

DEAR MISS CLARK—Do you know your friend Mr. Larkin well enough to ask him to come round to our reception? It is very informal, but we shall be so pleased to see him.

DEAR MISS CLARK—I am so annoyed that I forget Mr. Larkin's first name. I want to send him a card for our party. May I trouble you for his address?

Twenty-three notes that contained such references to George!

Yet for these ten days past George had not sent her—no, not a carnation. He did send her a note to excuse himself from driving with her in the park. He was not even at her aunt's regular family party, where he had begged her to have him invited. George had wholly dropped out of her life, and Gertrude had begun to wish that he had not dropped out.

The reader shall know what had happened. The reader shall know how a nice girl may be suddenly waked up to find that her lover is not the unimportant person which in his humility he had made her believe. The reader shall know how one young man got himself named from one end of a continent to the other.

All this happened in a very large city of 2,000,000 people, which is the capital of a very large country, which country is next to the republic of Altruria.

This country was governed partly by the principles of the nation of Altruria, partly by the principles of the devil and partly by a sort of happy go lucky system which had worked very well for 100 years. In the course of the happy go lucky arrangements it found itself in a scrape for the sort of ready money that it wanted. It had some ready money, which the people did not much like, and it wanted some ready money made of beaten gold. And so the chief magistrate of this happy go lucky country had issued his proposals for what was called a "popular loan."

Nobody knew very well how the popular loan was to be taken up, but everybody was quite sure that his next door neighbor had better subscribe to it. People went so far as to say how much Mr. Jones ought to subscribe and how much the Widow Smith ought to subscribe. But, up till the moment when Gertrude sent that unkind message to George by Florence, nobody knew very well how the thing was going to turn out. It might be that the popular loan would all be taken up by a set of sharpers, or it might be that it would not be taken at all. It might be that it would be a very unpopular loan. And everybody was very curious to see.

There was once an occasion when all the nations of the world agreed that every person in the world should scream as loud as he could at a particular instant of time. When the instant came, there was a horrible stillness over the mundane creation. For everybody, instead of screaming himself, had listened to hear somebody else scream, and no one screamed but a dumb man in China and a deaf woman in the Sandwich Islands.

It was something like this about the popular loan. But at last the great day came when, at Washington, they opened the bids.

Now, the credit of this nation was pretty good and pretty bad. In very bright, gilt edged times it could borrow money at less than 3 per cent. In those times when there was trouble about the sort of money that it would give and take, it generally had to pay $4 on $104—that is to say, its 4 per cents were placed at 104. The different sharpers and the different old ladies, the men and women who had been coaxed up to subscribing in different ways, were in general sending in their bids at 105 and 106 and 107.

But when at Washington the bids were opened, the weary clerks hearing "107 7-9," "104 11-12," till they went almost to sleep as they wrote down the scarcely varying numbers, all of a sudden a bolt fell like lightning from Jupiter. The reading clerk, almost as sleepy as the rest, cried out: "One hundred and twenty-five! Mr. George Larkin of New Bedlam offers 125 for 10 bonds of the new issue!"

Every sleepy clerk in the room started up in amazement. "Who is Mr. George Larkin?" And his bid was entered as by far the highest bid in the calendar.

The next evening every journal in that great empire, which extended from ocean to ocean, had a biography of Mr. George Larkin. These biographies were made up generally from the information given in the directory of New Bedlam. One of them therefore described Mr. George Larkin as the leading man at the Varieties. Another said that Mr. George Larkin was engaged in a profitable thread and needle business in the lower wards of New Bedlam. Another said that Mr. George Larkin had won his distinction as a reporter for the press. But all persons agreed that Mr. George Larkin was a person of great importance in the financial community, and that he was a patriot of the first water. It was generally agreed also that his foresight with regard to national affairs was well nigh perfect, and that no person knew so well as he did when stocks would rise and when they would fall. "Our readers will remember how on a previous occasion the whole turn of the stock market was changed by the sudden purchase of P. F. and L. This purchase is now attributed to the foresight of Mr. Larkin."

Gertrude, on that particular evening, did not happen to open her newspaper. If she had, she would have known that her lover was that day the man most talked about in the whole world. After this, she was so overwhelmed by her correspondence from different people who wanted her to introduce them to Mr. George Larkin that she had no time to open the newspapers for six months. She never knew, therefore, why Mr. George Larkin suddenly attained the prominence in all social walks, in walks of finance and indeed in the esteem of his fellow countrymen, which she had gained. She did know that, two or three days afterward, he came in to see her looking like a new man. He stood erect where his head had hung low, he had a cheerful smile on his face where he had looked dejected when she snubbed him. In fact, she did not dare to snub him. She knew that he was a person of much more importance in the estimate of the world than she was. And when George Larkin, for the first time in his life, gained the courage to ask Gertrude if she would marry him and make him happy for the rest of his life, Gertrude had no thought of saying anything but yes. So much is even a good girl governed unconsciously by the tone of the people who are around her.

It is an unimportant thing to add, but this great empire rose from its depression on the strength of Mr. George Larkin's offers to the treasury. Everybody saw that he was right, and nobody else was right. Four per cents rose to a higher line than had ever been known in history. The reputation of Mr. Larkin as a financier was established. Rothschilds and Belmonts and other bankers of the world begged for his advice, and offered him places in their firms. These he was not so foolish as to accept. But he lived a happy life with the woman he had loved, and he had the glad consciousness that, by the way, he had saved his country.—Edward Everett Hale in Chicago Inter Ocean.

Yule Fires.

Do not the "kitchen middens" of which geologists tell us—those singular remains of gigantic fires and roasted bones which science has discovered on many a northern shore—mark the site where the Yule logs of the king's fires were first kindled? Quantities of fossilized bones are embedded in the old world ash heaps—bones which careful investigation assures us have been roasted. Huge cooking places they must once have been. The bones strewing the ground after a carouse seem to have been a special feature of a Danish feast. We have only to recall the death of Elphage, the patriot archbishop of Canterbury, in the days of Ethelred, who, although a prisoner in the Danish camp, steadily refused to deliver himself by ransom, saying it would be treason in him to pay the enemies of England. "Gold, bishop, gold!" shouted the Danish troops, thirsting more for gain than blood, until, irritated by his constancy, they ran to a heap of bones and horns of oxen—the relics of their repasts—and showered them from all sides upon the aged Saxon. Elphage soon fell half dead, and was dispatched with an ax by one of the pirates.

We may gather some idea of these gigantic Yule fires from the ancient edicts and the allusions in the sagas to the all important duty of kindling the beacon fires at the approach of an enemy. Wherever the Norsemen settled these beacon fires were established and their wardens appointed. Olaus Magnus and Snorro both prove that large trees were cut down in the nearest forest and piled upon the beacon hill until the blazing pine wood must have resembled a burning mountain. Yet the king's fire at the feast of Thor exceeded the beacons on the Norway headlands, as it burned for weeks, for the feast of Thor was also the appointed time for regulating all home affairs.—Notes and Queries.

One or the Other.

"It's hard to give satisfaction," said the new congressman wearily.

"It's very difficult to tell what people are going to say about you," assented his wife.

"Yes. But it's pretty sure to be one of two things—they'll either say you're extremely ordinary or else that you're a freak."—Washington Star.

DR. DEPEW TOLD THIS

HOW ANDREW JOHNSON TRIED TO TURN OUT A HOSTILE CONGRESS.

General Grant Told Dr. Depew That Both He and General Sherman Were Asked by the President to Back the New Congress—Both Refused to Do So.

The printed reports of the speech of the Hon. Chauncey M. Depew before the State Bar association at Albany the other day did not contain one of the stories Mr. Depew told. The story was told to Mr. Depew by General Grant at a dinner several years ago, and he told it that night to illustrate the safeguards, constitutional and otherwise, which the people of this country enjoy.

It was when Andrew Johnson was president. President and congress were at odds. The president had no patience with congress and congress put no trust in the president. Grant, as commander of the army, was stationed in Washington. Johnson sent for the general one day, instructing the messenger to say to him that the president would see General Grant whenever he could arrange to call. Later in the day General Grant went over to the executive mansion.

"General Grant," said Johnson, "I have a plan, to carry out which successfully I may need your assistance. There are a lot of numskulls in congress and I propose to get rid of them. I propose, through the governors of the various states, to call for a new election of senators and representatives. Of course a majority of the Republican states won't agree to such a thing. If, however, I can get enough of the Democrats to agree to the election, the plan will go through. When it comes time for the new congress to convene, there may be trouble. If there is, can I rely upon you to turn over the capitol to the new congress and protect them if they need protection? What do you say?"

General Grant never wasted words, and he did not in this case. His reply was: "What do I say, Mr. President? I say that I will defend the present congress if it takes all the soldiers in the army to do it. Good day, sir."

A short time after that, according to Dr. Depew's story, the president ordered General Grant to go to Mexico. The general refused, on the ground that the commander of the army could not be ordered out of the country in a time of peace. A little later he was ordered to Oregon, and General Sherman was ordered to Washington. Sherman wrote to Grant of the order he had received and said he didn't understand it. Grant telegraphed to Sherman to meet him at a certain place en route. The two generals met, and Grant explained the situation. When Sherman reached Washington, Johnson summoned him to the White House and received the same answer from him that Grant had given. The president concluded that there was no use trying to enlist the services of the army, and nothing more was heard of the scheme.—New York Sun.

A BARBAROUS LAW.

Exists In the District of Columbia and Will Be Repealed.

Public attention has been attracted to the remarkable condition of the laws of the District of Columbia, by which a father is permitted to dispose of his minor children by a will which places their control entirely in the hands of any person whom he may select and deprives the mother of any legal right in their behalf.

Senator Hale is preparing to introduce a bill to repeal the remarkable statute. Mr. Hale introduced a resolution in the senate ordering the District committee to learn the exact form of the law on the subject and report to the senate. A report was submitted to the senate several days ago by Senator Faulkner, who stated that under existing laws the father had full power to will his children to whomsoever he pleased.

There is a feeling among the senators and representatives that the present law, which is an old English one enacted during the reign of Charles II, is a relic of barbarism. Many senators have expressed their intention of supporting the bill, and little doubt is expressed of its passage.

A similar measure will be introduced in the house.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

One on Senator Sherman.

This one is told of a recent reception at Senator Sherman's:

Charming lady, introducing herself to the senator from Ohio.

Senator—Why, of course. Do you know it's exceedingly difficult for me to remember names, strange as it may seem?

Charming Lady (having his recently published memoirs in mind)—Not strange at all, senator, for you seem to remember so many other things that these little social matters don't count anyway.

(Confusion of the senator and smiles all around.)—Washington Post.

One Way to Detect Corn Thieves.

A novel suit has been on trial at Rock Valley, Ia., in the justice court. Persons having corn around their barns and in cribs have of late missed considerable, and one who had been a steady loser plugged the end of a few ears, in the presence of witnesses, with shoe peg marks for identification. The next morning the cobs, plugged as above, were found on the premises of the suspected person, and he was arrested and found guilty.—Minneapolis Journal.

A PRINCESS OF PRUSSIA.

She Was Recently Thrashed by Her Leige Lord for Going Skating.

If Prince Frederick Leopold were just a common man instead of a prince, his wife, who is a princess of Prussia and a sister to the German Empress, would have had him arraigned in a police court for beating her. The fact is that he was arraigned by Emperor William, who tried him, sentenced him to imprisonment in his room and placed guards at the door to see that his brother-in-law served out the term. The Prince is a cavalry colonel and not long ago told his wife to stay in her room all day. The wife didn't like that sort of thing, or, at all events, did like skating, and with a young woman of her household left the room for an hour's whirl on the ice. The ice broke, the Princess got wet and was rubbed down and put to bed. When the Prince returned and heard the tale he sought out his lady and gave her a thorough drubbing, like a plain, blunt man, with his riding whip. Then he went to his study, fell in a fit and ground his teeth and groaned. But his servants refused to give him smelling salts or to throw cold water on him until the doctor arrived. The Kaiser and his wife were furious when they heard the story, and the Emperor decided to teach his high-handed relative a lesson. The severe punishment meted out to Prince Frederick mightily pleased all the ladies of the German court.

PRINCESS FREDERICK LEOPOLD.

TEN-YEAR-OLD KING.

Maharajah Krismarajah Is the Ruling Sovereign of Mysore.

Maharajah Krismarajah Wagayar Badadur are the official titles of a Hindu boy not yet 10 years of age, who is the King of Mysore. He is one of the chief native princes of India, and his late father, whom he has succeeded to the throne, was known as the "model prince of India." The young Rajah is being prepared for the lofty position he will occupy with great solicitude. He has English and native tutors, who will turn out a prince and a pundit at the same time. During his minority the affairs of the province are conducted by his mother and his late father's minister, Sir K. Sheshadri Iyer, as co regents. The youthful maharajah was recently visited by Lord Elgin, viceroy of India, and the occasion was celebrated with much eclat. The little fellow is an adept scholar and speaks English as fluently as any boy of his age. In his studies he is as far advanced as boys four or five years his senior would be in this country. He is modest, but realizes well that he is a trifle more important than anybody else in his neighborhood.

TEN-YEAR-OLD KING OF MYSORE.

Lieut. Schofield's Case.

One of the most interesting cases of "physical disability" of an officer of the army—the more interesting because it has aroused so much comment among officers of the army itself—is that of Second Lieutenant H. McA. Schofield, a son of Lieut. General Schofield. He recently appeared before an examining board in San Francisco for promotion, and the medical board refused to pass him upon the ground of defective hearing. Then came the question whether or not his deafness constituted "incapacity to perform duty" in his present rank. The next step was to examine the records of his first examination, upon his original entry into the service, to learn whether or not deafness was then observed; but they were found to be clear on this point. On the other hand, some officers have said that Lieut. Schofield was slightly deaf before he entered the service, and if this fact is proved a complication may arise which will not only affect the military status of Lieut. Schofield but also the officers on his first board. If it is found that the disability originated in the line of duty then he will be entitled to be retired with the rank of First Lieutenant.

LOOKED LIKE A LIAR.

BUT THIS WAS A CASE WHERE LOOKS WERE MISLEADING.

A Little Irishman Who Claimed Acquaintance With a Champion Pugilist—His Employer, Who Was Used to the Gloves, Disputed the Claim.

"I was reading a clever little sketch the other day about a man who told big stories which were not believed by his acquaintances, and it reminded me of an experience I had once when I was considerably younger," remarked Robert D. Wilson, the active Orleans county politician, when in a reminiscent mood the other day.

"It was like this: About the first contract I ever took was one to build a church in a small town in western New York near Lake Ontario. My partner and I employed a good force of men, and among others a good natured, rather dapper little Irishman, who applied for work shortly after we got the walls started.

"He was not a skilled workman, but a good, active helper, and he struck me at the time as being one of the most entertaining and cheerful liars it had ever been my pleasure to meet. One of his favorite tales was to the effect that he was for three years trainer and boxing partner of the famous pugilist Jem Mace and had seconded the one time champion in two of his most notable battles. He rattled off names, places, dates and incidents in the most offhand manner imaginable, which, as we had no means of verifying his statements, he was perfectly safe in doing. Of course we took what he said with a large grain of salt and enjoyed drawing him out.

"One thing about the old fellow struck me as peculiar—we could never induce him under any consideration to join in any of the friendly little sparring contests which we occasionally indulged in at the little country hotel, after our day's work was done. By no subterfuge could we induce him to stick his hands in the big mittens, although he was always present at our exercises and took delight in making slighting comments upon our skill.

"This got rather monotonous after awhile, and we set about devising a plan for teaching the old fellow a lesson. When he was sober, we knew there was no chance of getting the gloves on him, but he usually got moderately full on Saturday evenings, and we concocted a scheme to give him an earlier start one Saturday afternoon, so that by the time supper was over he was considerably exhilarated. I was just out of a gymnasium at the time, and was considered a pretty clever boxer. The boys all went to work at him, and after a good many drinks and a lot of coaxing and cajoling they finally got him to put on the gloves and spar a bit with me.

"'Sail in, Larry,' I said. 'Don't be afraid to hit me.' And I winked at the boys and went at him. He was easier than I expected. His guard seemed very poor, and several times I rapped him harder than I should, but it seemed a good plan to teach the old blowhard a good lesson. After awhile I got a bit tired of the one sidedness of it. I registered about every time I found an opening, while the Irishman's punches were all wild and of no account. Finally I decided that we had had fun enough and made up my mind to give him a good chinchopper, lay him out and quit. So I watched for an opening, and when I saw one a minute later, I aimed as heavy a blow as I could strike and let go.

"Well, say, I don't know even to this day what became of that punch, for at that moment something struck me on the neck, and for the next 30 seconds I experienced all of the sensations of Don Quixote when he had the mix up with the windmill, for that little Irishman was dancing around me and delivering undercuts, overcuts, chin choppers, sidewinders, earmuffs, straight drives and long arm body blows faster than I could feel them, while I pawed the air in an attempt at defense.

"I think the boys said it was 42 seconds before I was lying in the corner, limp and entirely out, but it was three days before I was out—at work again. I was sorry to find that the agile little Irishman had disappeared immediately after I dropped asleep. He evidently feared trouble, but I never would have made any. In fact, I'd have liked to take a few lessons from him, but I've never had the mitts on from that day to this.

"I don't know now whether that little Irishman was telling the truth or not, but I have my suspicions about the matter."—Medina (N. Y.) Cor. New York Press.

Easily Busted.

The business depression of the past few years has been the evolution of a large crop of employment seekers. One of them last week accosted a gentleman in this city. He was ragged, dirty, good natured, evidently hungry enough to eat a cow if it were in his way. But his soft slouchiness of gait rendered any active exertion on his part highly improbable. This impression was strengthened by the dialogue that followed:

"Good morning, sir," said he. "I'd like a job with you, sir."

"Well, there is not much doing just now—hardly anything, in fact, in my line. I couldn't give you much to do. I couldn't keep you busy."

"Indeed, sir, it would take very little to keep me busy."—New London Telegraph.

Intermittent Ownership.

"Do you own your own home?" asked the passenger with the yellow diamond, who makes a business of selling real estate.

"I do every Thursday," said the other passenger.

"Eh—what?"

"I own it every Thursday. That's Mary Ann's afternoon out."—Indianapolis Journal.

CHESS BY CABLE.

Brooklyn Club Matched Against the British Organization.

After a protracted session the other night the match committee of the Brooklyn Chess club finally decided upon the conditions under which the team match by cable with the British Chess club of London is to be contested.

The day's mail had brought to hand a letter from the Britishers inclosing a code of rules, which bore the signatures of the president and secretary of the British Chess club.

In view of the fact that the latter insisted upon playing only with native born players on each team the Brooklyn Chess club yielded this point sooner than have the contest fall through, but, on the other hand, changed the number of players from ten to eight on a side. As there is a much larger field of chess players in England to select from than there is over here the wisdom of this move is quite apparent.

SIR GEORGE NEWNES.

Thus the great contest, which is intended to be a real test of chess strength between the players of America and England, is an assured fact. The dates on which it will occur are Friday and Saturday, March 13 and 14. Two days are given in case all the games do not reach a conclusion on Friday and, as in this way adjudications are not likely to be necessary, a satisfactory result will thereby be obtained.

Sir George Nownes, president of the British Chess club, has generously offered as a trophy a splendid silver cup, valued at $800, to become the property of the winning side. He was mentioned in the dispatches from England some time since as being desirous to challenge for the America's cup this season.

Following is the full score of the game played in the international chess tournament at St. Petersburg on Jan. 17:

Choosing Bishops by Lot.

The Mennonites have a curious way of choosing a bishop, not by election, but by lot. They take as many hymn books as there are candidates for the office. In one of these books a paper slip is placed, and the candidate who draws that book is declared chosen. In this manner the Rev. Christian Risser has just been made bishop of the Mennonite congregations in Lancaster county, Pa. He had two competitors.—Albany Times-Union.

Joseph Mayer Hurt.

A serious accident recently befell Joseph Mayer, known everywhere as the Christ in the "Passion Play" at Ober Ammergau. While he was engaged in helping to haul a tree to a wagon the tree slipped from those hauling it and knocked Mayer down, falling upon one of his legs. The limb was so badly crushed that it was found necessary to amputate it.

An Orchestra In the Church.

An orchestra has been installed in the Baptist church at Galesburg, Mich. The pastor of the church leads and plays the clarinet. The music is good, and the new feature of the services is attracting big crowds to the church.

A Remarkable Reunion.

At a recent family reunion in Kentucky there was one man 98 years old that weighed but 63 pounds; a baby 2 years old that weighed 96½ pounds, and a woman with 12 toes and 14 fingers.

Will Sacrifice Butter For Armenia.

Wellesley college girls have voluntarily agreed to do without butter for a month if the faculty will devote the money thus saved to the suffering Armenians.

Could Furnish Columns of Copy.

When he becomes an ex-president, Grover will be in great demand as a syndicate letter writer.—Philadelphia North American.

Stories of Statesmen.

King of Them All.

Representative Crain comes from a district in which there are quite a number of Germans. In the Fifty-first Congress a prominent German came to Washington with his son, a boy of precocious tendencies of mind, to observe the workings of Congress. He is quite a friend of the Texas member and Crain took a seat in the gallery by their side to point out the notables of the House. It was the time when there was a great deal of talk about Speaker Reed and his rulings. The words "Czar" and "Tyrant" were on everybody's tongue when discussing Congressional affairs. After the boy had feasted his eyes on the scene in course of development on the floor for some time, he turned to his father:

"Papa, who are all those men down there in the seats, talking and reading and laughing?"

The German looked at the members on the floor whom the boy had indicated, and replied:

"My poy, dem ish de shpeakers of de House of Rebresentatives."

"And who is that large man on the platform with the hammer in his hand?" indicating Mr. Reed.

"Dot big, fat man dere? Oh, dot vos de king of all de shpeakers, my son," said the German.—Washington Post.

He Wanted to Know.

Mr. Vest, of Missouri, was making a speech in the Senate, when first Mr. Peffer arose and began to speak, and then Mr. Sherman, all three addressing the chair at the same time. Mr. Vest looked amazed, and after a minute' hesitation, called out:

"Mr. President, Mr. President."

The president paid no attention to Mr. Vest, however, when the Missouri member suddenly changed his tactics by declaring his desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. This appeal was not lost on the president.

"The gentleman from Missouri will state it," he said, ignoring Mr. Peffer and Mr. Sherman.

"I believe I was addressing the Senate, and had the floor," said Mr. Vest, "but it seems that I have no longer got it. If I can't get it any other way, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry to find out how I lost it."

There was a ripple of laughter in the chamber. Mr. Sherman apologized for his interruption, and Mr. Vest continued to hold the fort.—Washington Post.

The Silent Salisbury.

Few but Lord Salisbury's intimates know that he is by nature one of the most silent of men; quite a Von Moltke in that respect. Even as a boy at Eton (Vanity Fair records) he was much given to solitary mooning through the playing fields, with only an occasional game of "sixpenny" cricket.

He was not popular generally, except with his own form, for which he did all the work; and was always put on by his tutor to construe, which he did so well that no one else had to expect a turn. His taciturnity has stuck to him; and the writer remembers that when at the India office he greatly disappointed some high official who had to see him on some great question. "What do I think of him? Very little. Why, he heard all I had to say, then bowed me out with 'Good-morning' and not another word."

DISCOURSE ON WHAT TO EAT.

Grant Allen Explains How Many Potatoes a Coal-Shoveler Needs a Day.

Grant Allen, of Armour Institute, has translated articles of food into "calories" or units of energy, and can tell just how many potatoes it takes to shovel a ton of coal and how big a beefsteak should be eaten by the man who has to saw a cord of wood.

He says the human machine in an ordinary day's work uses up about 4,000 "calories," and if bread and pie and other fuel is not fed into the machine in sufficient quantities to produce this amount of energy the work must fail.

Grant Allen considers the vegetarian mistaken and gives chemical reasons why. Vegetables contain scanty "proteids," he says, are less stimulating and satisfying, and, measured in units of energy produced, are not economical. A man would have to eat about a bushel of potatoes to obtain enough "proteids" to do a good day's work. Mr. Allen said he considered an overfondness for sugar a cause of disease. Starches and oils and their chemical composition also came in for treatment.—Chicago Record.

A Bloodthirsty King.

The king of Benin, on the west coast of Africa, believes in the efficiency of human sacrifices. When times are good he kills a large number of slaves, and in seasons of calamity he kills an equally large number of these unfortunates, and in both cases to appease the gods, who are supposed to be equally angry at the good and the ill fortune of mortals.

Why should you yearn for fame? Maybe,
When death has ended earthly ills,
Posterity may blush to see Your name adorning some one's pills.
—Chicago Record.

Every man wants it understood that he is very sympathetic.

FRIDAY, MAY 15 ..... 1896

McKinley is neither a gold bug nor a silver bug. He belongs to the straddle bug variety.

McKinley is either a gold standard man or a liar. Which is it?—Merced Evening Sun.

Spain's baby king recently said in reciting his geography lesson "An island is a body of land entirely occupied by insurgents."

The human race is divided into two classes—those who go ahead and do something, and those who sit and enquire why, 'Why wasn't it done the other way.'—Ex.

McKinley needs no platform on the silver question. His record has been such a complete straddle that nothing that resolution writers could say would make his real sentiments harder to discover.

The Republicans of California and Colorado adopted platforms in favor of free silver and pledged their delegates for McKinley. It is now claimed that McKinley has a majority of 18 in the National Convention.

The House of Representatives has voted $100 per month for its members for clerk hire during the recess of Congress. There is nothing small about Mr. Reed's House when it comes to appropriating the public funds.

It is understood that the case to decide the constitutionality of the law giving office holders the right to rule for four years, will be placed upon the calender of the Supreme Court, which meets in Sacramento this month—Bee.

It is a subject of newspaper comment in southern California that cents are beginning to be used there in the stores and in commercial transactions generally. It is only a few years since any coin smaller than a ten cent piece was a great rarity on the Pacific coast.

Madam Calve sailed for Europe April 29th. She declared herself dying to see her friends again. Every trip to America makes Mme. Calve worth more to her friends. She sang 63 times during the opera season which has just closed and received $100,000 therefore. The Madame will soon be dying to see her friends in America once more.

It appears that the single state of Georgia has now more manufactories than the whole south had in 1860. This is an illustration of the remarkable change that has been taking place in southern industries during the past thirty years. That section is no longer giving its attention to agriculture, but is reaching out for additional means of prosperity, in imitation of the north.

Senator White has struck the key note of the nation's heart. In the Senate Friday he urged the necessity of coast defences. He called attention to the fact that our coasts, harbors and large cities were defenceless. He said he would not willingly discourage naval appropriations, but that something should be done to protect our coasts. Every thoughtful person will see the necessity of which our senator spoke and all agree that he is right.

Miss Florance Pullman, who was married to Mr. Louden of Chicago, draws a regular salary of $11,000 from the Pullman Palace Car Company for naming the cars turned out by the big works. Mr. Lowden is 34 years old and is rising young lawyer in Chicago. The wedding was a superb ceremonial. A former suitor for the hand of Miss Pullman was Prince Von Isenberg-Birstein, nephew of the Emperor of Austria and first cousin of the late Crown Prince Rudolph.

Voting by machinery seems to be among the early possibilities. And is is well. Highly improved as are our present election regulations, there is yet much room for dishonest manipulation. No sooner is a more improved plan adopted than methods are devised whereby the objects of the new system may be defeated. No system will so thoroughly meet present emergencies and reduce to a minimum fraudulent practices at the ballot box as the machine system. At least, it is superior to any plan yet devised. In addition to its restraint upon corruption the machine has numerous other advantages, one of which is that at the closing of the polls the correct total of all votes cast is indicated. This removes the necessity of long and tedious counting which so delays the announcement of results under the present system.

That which was a moral conviction has now become a legal certainty, namely: The South African Company, chartered and backed and boomed by the English Government and completely under its thumb, was back of, promoted and was the power that equipped the Jameson expedition. It conspired to steal a peaceful nation, territory and people. It plotted to rob in the day, to do the act of the highwayman. Between that organization, English from crown to toe, administering English law and presiding over English territory (the nominal Governor being a figurehead in South Africa and nothing more) and the Dick Turpins and Jack Cades of the earlier days, there is this difference: Cade, Turpin and Duval pretended to be nothing more than they were, highwaymen and thieves; the South Africa Company pretends to be decent, honest, superior and aristocratic. It is therefore the baser.

Stephen Salisbury.

A writer in the Worcester (Mass.) Spy thus describes Stephen Salisbury of that city, who has just given the city a site for an art museum and $100,000 to build it: "Simple in his tastes and modest and democratic in spirit, Mr. Salisbury's single aim is to spend money so as to relieve want, to raise to a high plane the lives of persons of small means and lofty and earnest purposes, and to add to the prosperity of Worcester. His intimate friends love and admire him. His gifts are never the offspring of impulse, but the product of anxious thought, yet they are never accompanied by troublesome conditions. What a beautiful example Mr. Salisbury is of practical wisdom and simple goodness! Gratitude cannot outrun his generosity or the warm interest which he feels in the welfare of his townsmen and fellow men."

Peppermint.

The preparation of peppermint is especially an American industry. The peppermint is cut when in bloom, like hay, dried, placed in close wooden vats and steamed. The oil cells burst and the oil passes upward with the steam, which is condensed and conducted into a receiver, where the oil rises and is piped off. It takes about 550 pounds of dry peppermint to produce one pound of oil. An acre of land yields from 6 to 10 pounds of oil, often more—even as high as 50 pounds. New York and Michigan produce the most.—Washington Post.

The Best.

Traveler—Where is the best hotel in this place?

Porter—Do you see that house over yonder? That is the worst.

Traveler—I don't want the worst. I is the best hotel I want.

Porter—Can't tell you, I'm sure. That's the only one we've got.—London Tit-Bits.

Order is the sanity of the mind, the health of the body, the peace of the city, the security of the state. As the beams to a house, as the heads to the members of man, so is order to all things.—Bentley.

The Linnet as a School.

Linnets are taught to draw their own water and open their seed-cases. A bone thimble is fastened by a thread to a wire and filled with water. At first it is fastened close to the wire and filled with water while the lid of the seed-box is propped open. Each day the lid of the box is lowered, and the thread of the thimble is lengthened. The bird learns to push the box open and toss pieces up the thread in its beak when the thimble is inconveniently distant. A glassful of water lies below the thimble, and when the bird has learned to pull the latter up it is left lying in the water glass, and the bird hops up, as usual, with the water in it.—London Spectator.

To Prevent Hydrophobia.

A correspondent writes that about six years ago he saw an item in a newspaper stating that a German physician was going to die, and he wished to make known the discovery he had made in relation to the treatment of a mad dog bite. The prescription he never knew to fail, and he had tried it many times with men, cattle and horses. It is this: Simply wash the wound as soon as possible in a little warm vinegar and water, and put a few drops of muriatic acid into the wound. This will neutralize the poison and prevent the disease which usually proves fatal.—Boston Journal.

Misdirected Energy.

"A man dat am alius lookin foh er argument," said Uncle Eben, "am in frequent cases de man dat orter be lookin foh work."—Washington Star.

The night blooming cereus blossoms about an hour before midnight, but by the approach of daylight the flower is a complete wreck, having lost all its beauty and fragrance.

The carthamine flower has for thousands of years been used to dye fabrics of a yellow color. The mummy cloths found in Egyptian cofins are dyed yellow with this flower.

Watermarks were originally used on bank notes as a means of preventing counterfeits.

RIDING ON A SUNBEAM.

A New Invention For Carrying Sound Without Wires.

When walking through the laboratory of the Volta bureau with Dr. A. Graham Bell, the inventor of the telephone, I picked up on one of the shelves a piece of pine board about half an inch thick and eight inches square. Out of the center of it extended a speaking tube, which apparently rested against a thin disk of bright metal sunk into the opposite side. This metal was like a silver mirror, and was about as large around as the bottom of a tumbler. I asked Dr. Bell what it was, and he told me that it was a perfected instrument whose original construction enabled him to project his voice from one point to another through the medium of a sunbeam. It enabled him, in other words, to send sounds along a ray of light without the aid of an electric wire. He took the instrument and put the tube to his mouth, holding the mirror so that it caught the sun and cast a little shadow disk of light on the opposite wall. Then by breathing slightly he made this shadow increase and diminish, and assume various shapes by the action of his breath against the mirror diaphragm.

"That shows you," said he, "how the action of the diaphragm is carried along the ray. Now, if you will put a little bottle with some soot in it where that shadow is on the wall, and speak into the tube, you will find that the sound will travel along that ray of light, and by having a receiver connected with the bottle one would be able to hear what you are saying. We have spoken by this means to and from points 200 yards apart, and there seems to be no reason to doubt that speech may be sent along a beam of light for great distances. In our experiment in this we first used selenium, a very rare substance, and very sensitive to light. We have found, however, that we can produce very good results with common soot, and the discoveries may yet be made which will make such an invention commercially practicable."—World's Progress.

NATURE OF THE ELDER DUMAS.

Mme. Dorval, the Actress, Always Called Him Her "Good Dog."

I did not meet the elder Dumas until he was on the wane, but was acquainted with him before he fell under the influence of Adah Isaacs Menken. When young, his hair was fair, then dark, but when I saw him it was gray and in texture less woolly than the negro's. His lips were thick and extended from ear to ear when he laughed, and his teeth were uneven and set apart from each other. He flattered himself that his nose was straight. It was, however, lumpy, with wide, strongly marked and quivering nostrils. To the pride of life he was insensible. But he was a slave of the flesh, though in a fitful way, and the never ending pressure of creditors obliged him to react against his conviviality. One saw that he was a force of nature and a child of nature.

His small hands and feet and his singularly acute though good natured blue eyes alone indicated blood derived from a long line of civilized northern ancestors. There were traces of Africa in his speech. His laugh was a guffaw, but its hilarity was contagious. When a case of suffering was made known to him, his face at once fell, and if he knew the sufferer the broad face contracted, and he howled until he had spent his grief. Mme. Dorval, whom he and Victor Hugo thought the greatest actress of her time, for emotional parts, used to call him her "bon chien" and her "gros chien." In the hour of death she did not lay aside this term of endearment, which I say she would have resented. He was English in many respects, but of the generous, impulsive, Rowlandson type.—"The Elder Dumas," by Emily Crawford in Century.

No More Book Proposals.

Search reveals the amazing fact that the proposal—in literature at least—is becoming obsolete. Stories there are of a plenty, but in the English publications they mostly relate to mysterious disappearance of diamonds or are tales of conspiracy or intrigue, and in the American product the proposal is all done behind the scenes—the reader is introduced to the engaged couple or to the married pair. The sentimental age is passing evidently, and we contemptuously hurry over the romantic episode to reach those dramatic crises in life which seem to occupy the attention of both writers and readers.—Chicago News.

BORN.

McSWEENY—At Independence, Cal., May 10, 1896, to Mr. and Mrs. Michael McSweeny, a son.

P. H. Mack Esq. left for Los Angeles last Monday.

E. Robinson has been on the sick list the past week.

A few ripe strawberries were seen in town last week.

J. J. Gunn came in from Modock last Tuesday morning.

J. D. Blair was quite sick a couple of days the past week.

Harry Cook has sold his band of cattle to Chas. Summers.

E. Spencer and L. Schalton were down from Big Pine last Saturday.

John Shepherd was a passenger up from Keeler last Tuesday morning.

It is reported that the old Indian, Joe Bowers has been granted a pension of $10 a month.

Supervisor Eldred and daughter, Miss Clara came down from Big Pine Sunday and returned.

Col. North, the Nirate king died in London last week. His wealth was estimated at over $100,000,000.

Two school trustees are to be elected for this district at the election to be held the first part of next month.

Chas. Summers has gathered all of his cattle that were in this vicinity and started for Long Valley with them.

For the killing of Geo. Cole in Bodie last winter, Geo. Turley received a sentence of 66 years in San Quentin.

Contractor Prahm has been making some alterations and repairs in the school house the past two weeks.

Dr. McCrellin, a relative of P. W. Forbes Esq has been visiting with Mr. Forbes and family the past week.

At the meeting of the Democratic Central Committee last Saturday, all business was postponed for two weeks.

H. H. Homes, the convicted murderer of several people, was hanged in the Pennsylvania state prison last Thursday.

Mr. and Mrs. F. E. Densmore arrived home last Tuesday morning, after a month's visit with relatives and friends in other parts of the State.

H. M. Yerington has had a private car built for use when making trips over the road, and it is said to be a beauty. It will be launched for its first thip this week.

A number of people from Independence, the Fort and Liberty went to Bishop last week to attend the entertainment given there on the evenings of the 7th and 8th.

Mrs. J. D. Blair, Miss Maud Cook and Miss Annie Schabbell returned from Los Angeles last Tuesday morning, after having spent a pleasant visit of a couple of weeks there.

A break in the machinery at the Hirsh mill the first of the week will cause a short delay. No time will be lost however, as the mill crushes the ore faster than it is taken from the mine.

John T. Jones who was convicted for felonously taking gold bullion from the Carson Mint, was sentenced Monday of last week by Judge Hawley to eight years at hard labor in the Nevada State penitentiary and to pay a fine of $5,000.

Items from the Reporter's Note Book.

A new sixteen foot row boat will be placed on the lake in a few days. Mr. H. L. Wrinkle received the boat last Wednesday night and it will be launched with as much ceremony as possible.

E. M. Huntley went to Darwin on the last stage and returned Wednesday.

Sam Thomas is hauling ore from the Sterling mine where Lockett and Pennaluna have had a year's lease.

J. G. Dodge is hauling a few carloads from the McKenzie mine.

It is reported that the miners have attached the Dunphy mine for wages due them. This mine is situated in Cerro Gordo and is supposed to be an extension of the Union mine.

W. H. Walker of Olancha made a flying trip to Keeler on Monday's stage and returned home again Monday evening.

John McSweeny is fixing the County road between Keeler and Darwin which needs it badly since the last storm during which time the wind filled it full of sand and rubbish.

Some rich gold strikes are reported at Beveridge district and also out in the Panamint range where there will surely be a big mining boom some day in the near future.

It is rumored that Neil McLean wil soon move his family to Mojave where he has plenty of steady teaming to do.

We visited Chinatown one night recently and entering one of the celestial cabins, found a pig-tailed Mongolian sitting on a soap box with his sandaled feet perched upon a table like a down-east Yankee. He was engaged in reading a Chinese work of fiction, which after considerable cross-questioning we learned was called "Lee Sing, or the slant-eyed tulip of Chow Foo." We were anxious to find out the plot of the story and begged the Chinaman to give us a free translation. After some urging the follower of Confucius strung off the following: "You see Lee Sing him belly good gal. Allee China boys heap stuck on Lee Sing—want molly him. Chung Li him heap lich man, him tly catchee on. Lo Sing tink Chung Li no good. Hoo Cow him plitty good boy. Him heap sabee how laise cabbagee, ledicee, leidishee, onionee; belly good. Hoo Cow he fightee Chung Li. Plitty soon Chung Li him get belly sich. Hoo Cow sticker knife in him nose. Chung Li him lun away. Hoo Cow him gettee Lee Sing. Hab belly good time. Dlink heap Chinee wiskey allee same siellican man." Yours fictionally,

CHINA.

The Cantata of "David"

On Thursday and Friday evenings of last week the Oratorio Society of Bishop presented the Cantata of "David," in that town. The Society had worked faithfully for some time and that their efforts were highly appreciated, the crowded hall gave evidence. While the music itself was of a high order and admirably rendered, the popular fancy was perhaps more quickly captivated by the gorgeous costuming and charming tableau effects. In Mr. Smith's rendition of David as the shepherd boy and of Mr. McClure as David the warrior both showed a study and understanding of the parts, while Mrs. Helen McQueen's Abigail left a beautiful picture on the minds of those present that will not soon fade. The members of the society should feel gratified at the reception of their first effort and should allow it to serve as an incentive to renewed efforts and faithful work on their part.

Liberty Silver Club.

The citizens of Liberty met last Saturday at at that place for the purpose of organizing a political party, and the following officers were elected:

President, J. G. Smith; Treasurer, B. Aguirre; Secretary, F. R. Smith.

Committee appointed and following resolutions adopted:

1st, That this shall be known as the Liberty Silver Club.

2nd, That we adopt the principals of the Omaha Platform of 1893.

3rd. That members pledge themselves to support nominee of Party.

After resolutions were adopted a number of those present, and more will sign when they see a copy of Omaha Platform.

After other business, as to campaign work etc., Club adjourned, to meet Saturday, May 23, 1896, to which meeting all are invited. F. R. SMITH, Secretary.

Excitement in Virginia.

The excitement in mining stocks is running high. Nearly everybody has dug up a stocking of money and invested lavishly. One local firm is reported shaky. Shaft No. 1 on the Brunswick lode is now down 430 odd feet. In the south drift, on the 200-foot level, cross cut No. 1 has been advanced eight feet, and is now in now in nearly 200 feet. The face shows now 3½ feet of $55 ore. Twenty-four cars of ore have been extracted which goes $60 per ton. Considerable improvement is noted in the Savage. The ore yield the past week has been 45 cars, of the average assay value of $68 per ton. Virginia seems like the old town of years ago. Everybody is talking stocks, and the recent strike has caused renewed courage and confidence.

Wonderful Curative Properties.

For a number of years past it has been a fact generally known that the Coso springs possessed wonderful curative properaties in cases of rheumatism. Many people have been benefited by the springs that were unable to obtain relief by any other means, and no person ever tried the treatment that was not freed from pain. An effort is being made to bring the springs to the notice of the outside world, which, if successful, will be a benefit to humanity. The following is reported from the INYO INDEPENDENT of June 20, 1883:

These singular springs are situated in Inyo County, in the Coso range of mountains about sixteen miles southeast of Olancha Post Office. The springs have but a limited flow, and from crevices on the mountain side, through which steam is continually ejected, and thousands of tons of pure sulpher cover and surround the locality. The taste of the water is intensely sour, making it unfit for drinking purposes. It has no smell, but formerly there must have been large quantities of sulphureted hydrogen contained in it, as the sulphur deposit indicates. Large quantities of free sulphuric acid is found in the water, but the sulphur deposit, it is claimed by chemists, cannot be derived from this source. Chemists are at least acquainted with a process by which free sulphuric acid would turn under the circumstances, such as the above, into sulphur. The composition is certainly a remarkable one, as will be seen from the following analysis. In one hundred thousand parts are contained

|---|---|
| Free sulphuric acid | 78.4 |
| Potassium sulphate | 2.5 |
| Sodium sulphate | 15.1 |
| Celcium sulphate | 15.3 |
| Magnesium sulphate | 1.2 |
| Aluminium persulphate | 127.0 |
| Iron persulphate | 33.2 |
| Nitric acid | Trace. |
| Chlorine | Trace. |
| Ammonia | Trace. |
| Lithium | Trace |

Springs or lakes of a chemical character like this are very rare; singular is also the small trace of chlorides in a water so strongly charged with mineral matters. The only known instance analogus to it is the Sour Lake in Texas, and a spring in the vicinity of the volcanoes in South American Cordilleros de los Andes.

Frank Littlefield, last week swore out a warrant for the arrest of Jack Burrows, on a charge of robbery, commited at Keeler. Burrows was arrested by Constable Murphy and brought before Justice Davidson Saturday evening and held over to appear before the Superior Court. He has been unable to get bail and will have to remain in jail. Burrows has worked around here for several years as a cook and waiter. Littlefield is a stranger here. It is said that at the time the act is claimed to have been committed both parties were intoxicated.

Lectures.

A series of lectures will begin at the M. E. Church by Prof. Morris, A. M., principal of Inyo Acadamy, on Friday, Saturday and Sunday May 15, 16, and 17. The first lecture to be free for all. The second lecture, on "The common man" which will be given on Saturday night, 25 cents admission, and on Sunday there will be a free will offering. One half of proceeds will be for insurance on church property, the balance for Prof. Morris's expenses. These lectures will be very interesting, and we hope to see them very largely attended. The subjects are as follows:

"The Wonders of Prophecy Historically Told." In this lecture the audience will be conducted through the ruins of ancient cities and nations, and view them as they now appear.

"The Comom Man." The common man in history, policies and social life. The world debtor to the common man—Illustrated by incidents and anecdotes that "bring down the house."

"The Signs Of The Times." A sensatianal lecture treated from a historical, political and philosophical standpoint.

No English Better Than English.

A new argument against college athletics has been invented—the deplorable effect which they have on "good English" by grafting upon it "the coarse language of sports." The plea, says the New York Times, is truly amusing. What on earth is "good English" anyhow? So far as we know, there is no English better than English, and no writer thereof has ever hesitated to use new words from any source, provided they expressed an idea more clearly, or even more picturesquely, than did those which formed the vocabulary of his grandfather. Shakespeare is full of the "language of sports," ranging from falconry to pugilism, and if he lived today it is absolutely certain that he would glean words from the football fields—and that college professors would denounce him for it. Really great men are like the common people, in that they never make a fetich of the parts of speech, never imagine that dictionaries or grammars settle anything, and never make the mistake of confounding a live tongue with dead ones.

Decision Reserved.

"Don't you think the mince pie is good, Willie?" asked the housewife who prides herself on her culinary accomplishments.

"Yes'm—I think it is, probably."

"But you have eaten three pieces."

"I know it. But I can't tell for sure till tomorrow morning. I had some mince pie last year that I thought was pretty good, but it didn't make me dream a bit."—Washington Star.

WHAT NEGLECT MAY DO.

There are some infirmities that only a surgeon's knife will relieve, and mostly strictly because of neglect. A neglected nerve pain may become so chronic as to cripple and this is often the case with Sciatica. If taken in time, it is easily subdued, like other nerve pains, and vigor and health are restored. Thousands of cases have been treated by the use of St. Jacobs Oil, with the result of a prompt and permanent cure and restoration to health of the affected nerve. People cannot be too careful with their nerves. There is too much to suffer to admit of foolish neglect, and the simple thing of getting a bottle of St. Jacobs Oil and applying promptly may save years of misery and perhaps years of crippled condition. Let this warning serve to show what can be and what ought to be done without delay in an attack of this disease.

A SHIPS' GRAVEYARD.

The Treacherous Jersey Shore Where the St. Paul Went Ashore.

No record shows the number of wrecks on the Jersey coast, but the Long Branch shore is a ships' graveyard. The character of the shore changes about the middle of Long Branch. To the north it is a thin coating of sand covering a bottomless silt. To the south it is solid sand, hard almost as a rock. The ship that strikes that sand is almost certainly gone. From the silt there is a good chance of escape.

Of the accidents similar to the St. Paul's mishap that have happened along the Jersey coast in the last 20 years that to the French line steamer L'Amerique is probably the best remembered. At 3 o'clock on the morning of Jan. 7, 1877, L'Amerique hit the sand off Seabright and stuck fast. Tugs and wrecking steamers worked at her for more than three months, trying to get her off the sand. The cargo was all lightered, but the steamer hung fast to the shore.

A big storm drove her down the beach 600 feet at one time, but at the end of it she was no farther offshore than at the start. By Feb. 22 the wreckers had moved her 120 feet away from the shore, and then came on a shore gale which left the big liner farther on the beach than she had even been before. Finally, on April 10, the wrecking tugs succeeded in pulling the ship out of the mud, and she was brought to New York comparatively little damaged.

While the wreckers were struggling with L'Amerique the Red Star liner Russland, the old Kenilworth, poked her nose into the hard sand just south of the West End hotel at Long Branch. She struck about half past 10 o'clock on the night of March 3, 1877, and a big three cornered piece of her still sticks up out of the hard sand to mark her grave. She went on right over the wreck of the old grindstone laden Adonis, and there never was a chance for her.

There was a blanket of fog on Feb. 10, 1875, that sent three steamers ashore, and one of them never got off. The Queen of the National line and the France of the French line, both transatlantic liners, struck the Jersey shore, the first at Squan and the second at Long Branch. It was in an unruffled sea, however, and both got off the next day. The Vicksburg of the Port Royal and Fernandina line saw Fire island light and thought it was Barnegat. She hit about 80 miles east of Fire island, and what is left of her lies there. The cook fell in, trying to get into a small boat, and was drowned.

Last summer the British tramp Irrawaddy spent two or three weeks rooting about in the sand almost beside the fishing pier at Asbury Park, but they got her out of it after a hard pull.—New York Sun.

PADDING THEIR HEADS.

New York Women Being Artificially Widened in the Top Story.

The women of New York are padding their heads. It is a secret of fashiondom, patented, and from Paris. It isn't that they wish to give the impression that their brains are as big as the brains of their brethren; it isn't that the new woman idea has swelled their craniums; it isn't an insidious way of revenging themselves on the public for the crusade against the theater bonnet; it isn't a rivalry with the football hirsutal glories, or the glory of Paderewski's expansive aureole. It is simply the latest fashion.

For the sweet simplicity of sleek heads and parted locks is passe, and the pompadour is revived. It is a fluffy pompadour, and long drawn out. It is a pompadour, soft and full, which reaches around to the crown of the head, where the coil is fastened. Such a pompadour is not to be produced unless milady's crown of glory is plentiful and of the soft, dry quality which lends itself to the crinkling persuasions of the curling iron. Even then the proper uniform bouffant effect of the new pompadour is hard to achieve.

Here comes in the secret from Paris. It is a new merveilleuse pompadour frame, almost like a cap—light, hollow, springy and fitting neatly beyond the ears. Invisibility is certain, as these frames are composed of real hair and are made in shades to match all colors of tresses. It is merely a development of the feminine fad for expansion that has run the gamut of crinolined sleeves and skirts, cheek plumpers and hip pads, bust forms and bodice fillings, false calves and "improved" insteps, and has now reached the crown of milady's head with a rounding out effect that promises a proportionate increase in big hats.—New York World.

A Plea For the Future Woman.

At the recent woman suffrage convention at Washington Mrs. Charlotte Stetson, a California woman, read the following poem, which she had herself written:

Can you imagine nothing better, brother,
Than that which you have always had before?
Have you been so content with wife and mother
You dare hope nothing more?

Go ask the literature of all the ages!
Books that were written before women read—
Pagan and Christian, satirist and sages—
Read what the world has said!

Eve and Pandora! Always you begin it—
The ancients call her sin and shame and death!
There is no evil without a woman in it,
The modern proverb saith!

She has been yours in uttermost possession—
Your slave, your mother, your well chosen bride—
And you have owned in millionfold confession,
You were not satisfied.

Peace, then! Fear not the coming woman, brother,
Owning herself, she giveth all the more!
She will be better woman, wife and mother
Than man hath known before.

CAPE HATTERAS' LIGHT.

The Skeleton Tower Planned for Outer Diamond Shoal.

One of the greatest engineering feats of the day is to be attempted by the Lighthouse Board. For years the officers in charge of lighthouses have talked of a station on Outer Diamond shoal, a particularly dangerous point off Cape Hatteras, celebrated among mariners for its fearful storms.

The structure is to stand in about 33 feet of water, and will be supported on disk piles sunk 30 feet in the sand. The floor of the watch house will be 47 feet above high water. Forged steel will be used in the main structure, and the principal joints and connections will be of steel castings. The essential parts below the water line will be of massive dimensions.

The structure will be of the skeleton style, and therefore will leave the sea full play. The section which will be most affected by the force of the waves is that extending from 13 feet below the water line to 17 feet above, and in this section a system of framing will be used which will be at once strong, simple and rigid. The house for the lonely keepers and the stores and the room for fog signals apparatus are to be of iron or steel and will be fireproof. A boat will swing from an arm, so that the keepers may abandon the place if there is likelihood of the structure being demolished.

Whether Hatteras and its dangerous outer shoal are to be guarded by a lighthouse built on the plan of the lighthouse board or simply by an inexpensive light vessel, probably will depend upon Congress. The board has given its approval of the proposed light, and the plans are complete. There is also available about $300,000 with which to begin the work, and it is expected that the remainder, to carry out the project, will be asked this winter. If it is secured, or if authority is given to begin the work, the Government proposes to undertake it alone, and not to ask for bids from contractors, as it did previously, to establish the light.

The light will be visible at least 20 nautical miles, and in thick weather the most powerful steam fog siren will be blown at short intervals. Three keepers will be required to manage the light and keep it in order. There will be room for eight people. On account of the dangers attending lighthouse tenders that come alongside, all supplies will have to be hoisted in by an immense derrick projecting far out from the side of the light. There will be supplies to last six months.

Epitaph of an Indian Chief.

Just below the St. Augustine city gates, and in the first yard west of the corner of Granada street, in Orange street, is a large stone surmounting a mound, commemorating the burial place of Ptolomato, an Indian chief who lived in ages gone by. It is within a couple of feet of the front fence, yet undoubtedly is passed unnoticed by thousands of tourists. The inscription carved in the stone tells its own story, though interest would be added if the very peculiar style of lettering could be reproduced:

The Woman Landlord.

Women make very good landlords, but beware of the woman who owns only one house. She regards it as the apple of her eye. She lives near to keep it under surveillance. Whether she goes out on an errand or takes her constitutional, her steps lead by her house. At a glance she can tell the condition of the shutters, the front door and the area. Her accustomed eye knows every scratch, and she is prepared to resist to the utmost any proposition to renew the shutters or to paint the front door.

She regards her tenant as her natural enemy, and cannot understand why she may not enter her own property whenever she has a mind.

But she is cheerfully prompt on rent day; too prompt, for she does not take delay with grace. When a woman has a second house, say the agents, her character is ameliorated. And as her knowledge of affairs broadens she does not differ materially from other landlords.—New York Journal.

Every One Will Echo This.

What a victory it will be for Clara Barton if she shall succeed in bringing the grand Turk to terms! Her triumph would make her one of the "great powers." May she win!—New York Recorder.

A FAMOUS EPITAPH.

It Marks In Poughkeepsie the Grave of a Self Exiled Englishman.

There are some interesting epitaphs in the old graveyards in Poughkeepsie, but probably none of them has been so widely known and admired as that on the stone which marks the burial place of John Taylor in front of Christ church, on Academy street. This epitaph has been widely published on both sides of the ocean, it is said, and is believed to have been written by the English poet William Roscoe and sent over for his friend Taylor's gravestone. Yet the stone lies neglected, and the last three lines of the epitaph have been broken off, probably during the work preceding the building of the new church. The epitaph was published in Benson J. Lossing's book on "Vassar College and Its Founder," and was greatly admired and frequently quoted by Matthew Vassar, Jr., as many of his friends remember. The inscription and epitaph on the stone are as follows:

In this spot was interred
John Taylor
Attorney at Law
the eldest son of Doctor John Taylor of Bolton le Moors, England, who died of the yellow fever
Sept. 11th, 1805.
Aged 36 years.

Far from his kindred friends and native skies
Here mouldering in the dust poor Taylor lies.
Firm was his mind, and fraught with various lore
And his mild heart was never cold before.
He lov'd his country, lov'd that spot of earth
Which gave a Hampden, Milton, Bradshaw birth,
But when that country, dead to all but gain,
Bowed her base neck and hugged the oppressor's chain
Loathing the abject scene he drooped and sighed,
Crossed the wild waves and here untimely died.
Stranger what'er thy country creed or hue
Go and like him the moral path pursue;
Go, and for Freedom every peril brave
And nobly scorn to be or hold a slave.

The last line is one that has been particularly admired and frequently quoted, and it is gone from the stone, which is broken off just after the fourth line from the end. That this stone should have been so mutilated seems little short of vandalism. John Taylor is said to have come to this country about the same time that the Vassar family came, shortly after the close of the American Revolution, and at a time when the English government was repressing all outspoken friends of reform in fear of a repetition in England of the French revolution. He was the uncle of Mr. Hudson Taylor, and the greatuncle of Mr. Robert E. Taylor. His father, Dr. John Taylor, was a very prominent man in England, with many influential friends, one of whom was the poet Roscoe, who wrote the epitaph, which reminds one very much of some of Goldsmith's best lines.—Poughkeepsie Eagle.

THE MOON BOTHERED JULIET.

A Small Japanese Boy Held It and Would Not Go Away.

"While in Japan we went to Tokyo to play 'Romeo and Juliet,'" said Mrs. Potter recently. "We played from 7 o'clock in the morning until 9 o'clock in the evening, as the manager demanded plays that would last all day, and when I told him that we had none of sufficient elasticity he replied that when it was all ended, we would start all over again. Well, we did. The manager was impressed with the necessity of having a moon, and that Juliet, as near as possible, should always be kept in the moonlight.

"Well, the balcony scene arrived, and there was no moon, but in the midst of Romeo's most passionate wooing, which, so far as the light on the stage was concerned, might have taken place at midday, the moon suddenly appeared. It was in the form of a lantern fixed on a bamboo pole and was swayed before my face by a little Jap who stood beneath the balcony in full view of the audience. The audience didn't seem to mind it in the least, but it made me very nervous, and every time Romeo would pour forth his soul I would ejaculate, 'Take away that moon.' But the boy was mindful of his instructions, that Juliet was always to be in the moonlight, and during the rest of the performance every time I came on the stage I was pursued by that awful moon. Nothing could induce the boy to desist, and so the moon held full sway."—Rochester Union and Advertiser.

LEIGHTON'S FAIR MODEL.

Dorothy Dene, Who Posed For Many of His Best Pictures.

A tall woman, beautifully formed, with a skin firm and smooth and of that golden tinted white that Henner delights in, a head Grecian enough to have furnished inspiration for one of Praxiteles' Aphrodites, with golden hair, violet eyes—such a woman is Dorothy Dene, whom the late Frederick Leighton made famous in many of his best known paintings.

She was his favorite model. With all her charms of person, Dorothy Dene is as simple as a child, modest and retiring. Her naturalness, as much as anything, endeared her to the great artist, who was devoted to her for many years.

Rumor has woven a romance in his life, in which his model figures.

It says he loved her, but that circumstances over which he had no control prevented him from marrying her.

She is one of five sisters. They all live in London, where they have a cozy little apartment in South Kensington, the art center of the British capital. It is one of the most artistic flats in London, and one in which more beaux esprits, painters, musicians and litterateurs gather, when she is at home, two Sundays in each month, than in any other in the big city.

Miss Dene visited this country in the winter of 1893 and was seen on the stage here. Her theatrical venture was not a brilliant success, but her beauty caused quite a sensation.

She spoke of Sir Frederick Leighton—he had not then been made a peer—with great tenderness. In an interview with her at that time, published in The Journal, she said, "Although Sir Frederick is over 60 years old, he is the youngest man I know, and, I might add, the kindest, most generous."

She told of where the great artist painted his wonderful Grecian pictures. He believed in the beautiful, lived in the beautiful, and many of his best canvases adorned the walls of the room in which they were brought into existence. No "artistic dust" was visible there; everything was neat, she said, showing an even mind given to beautiful thoughts and the portraying of them.

He was the soul of good nature and occupied in English society a position somewhat like Chauncey M. Depew does here as regards his after dinner speaking. Whenever there was a big banquet, Frederick Leighton was always there, and when he spoke he always had something to say and something to which everybody listened.—New York Journal.

Something New In College Tricks.

At Mount Union college, during the usual term orations of the junior class, W. M. Fatherly, a junior, whose home is at Lisbon, was delivering his address. He was waxing eloquent in his oratorical flights, when suddenly a big white curtain descended in front of him, completely shutting off the speaker from the audience. On the curtain was painted in glowing letters, "God help these little juniors." Fatherly ceased speaking, and his oratorical effort has not yet been finished.—Cincinnati Commercial Gazette.

Seeking For Fame.

The Mississippi river was never so low as it is at the present time. Near Potosi several men are engaged in sounding the depth of the water in the river bed in an especially shallow spot. Their purpose is, if possible, to find a place where it will be possible to drive a team from the Wisconsin shore to Iowa. By accomplishing this feat, they hope to gain wide notoriety.—Milwaukee Wisconsin.

REV. ZEPHANIAH MEEK, D.D.

Eminent Methodist Divine Cured of Nerve Trouble by Paine's Celery Compound.

Rev. Zephaniah Meek, D. D., is a household name all over the South. Since 1867 he has owned and edited the "Central Methodist," the leading paper of the Methodist Episcopal Church in the South. He represented his State at the General Conference.

He was one of the Kentucky Commissioners at the Chicago Columbian Exposition. During his ministry in the South he has built and dedicated five chapels. He writes from Catlettsburg, Ky., where his home is, as follows:

"I have used several bottles of Paine's celery compound for nervous trouble, resulting from overwork, and with immediate effect, as well as permanent benefit. It is the best nerve tonic that I have ever tried. It has also been used in my family with great benefit."

Tired-out, half-sick men and women need something more than a mere rest. They need a positive, unmistakable nerve food; they must have a reserve of nerve-force to draw from, before their heads will cease to ache and their nerves cease to tremble with neuralgia.

It is estimated that there are over ten million nerve fibres in the body.

So long as these minute tissues are kept fully nourished, one lives in blissful ignorance of any such thing as neuralgia, headaches, or even a nervous system, but let one become "run-down" and the nutrition of the body get low, and every one of these myriad fibres becomes a "live wire" within the flesh. Headaches, neuralgia, rheumatism, and other forms of nervousness and debility result directly from a famished nervous system. Paine's celery compound is able to correct this faulty condition. It builds up the nervous system and sustains it. The brain at once feels the strengthening effects of the superb nutriment. There are thousands of men and women today who have been enabled to keep vigorously at work, who must have given up but for Paine's celery compound.

Nervous affections are a warning to busy people.

At the earliest sign of reduced nerve force, inability to sleep, languor, or a gloomy habit of mind, everyone should look immediately to the nutrition of their nervous system and to the purity of their blood. Paine's celery compound will attend to both of these urgent needs more thoroughly and more speedily than anything else in the world. Paine's celery compound is not to be confounded with the common preparations, the sarsaparillas and nervines. Being the discovery of a man of science, Prof. Edward E. Phelps, M. D., LL.D., of Dartmouth College, it has the support of the best physicians; they prescribe it universally; and the many sick persons made well by its use proves that that support is merited.

To the great majority of business men a vacation, to say nothing of three months of complete inactivity, is out of the question at this season, even when their brains demand a complete rest and their nerves ache and threaten them with prostration. Now, there are hundreds of business men and hard-worked professional men in this city in just this condition. What are they to do? Those who are tired out, 'run-down" and debilitated at this trying season will do well to read some of the straightforward and convincing statements from the men and women who have been cured by Paine's celery compound.

Nervous weakness vanishes before Paine's celery compound as mist before the strong, health-giving rays of the sun. Convince yourself of the fact at once, if your health is at all impaired.

THE WANDERER.

Upon a mountain height, far from the sea,
I found a shell,
And to my listening ear the lonely thing
Ever a song of ocean seemed to sing,
Ever a tale of ocean seemed to tell.

How came the shell upon that mountain height?
Ah, who can say
Whether there dropped by some too careless hand
Or whether there cast when ocean swept the land,
Ere the Eternal had ordained the day?

Strange, was it not? Far from its native deep,
One song it sang,
Sang of the awful mysteries of the tide,
Sang of the misty sea, profound and wide,
Ever with echoes of the ocean rang.

And as the shell upon the mountain height
Sings of the sea
So do I ever, leagues and leagues away,
So do I ever, wandering where I may,
Sing, O my home; sing, O my home, of thee!

—Eugene Field.

IN WARTIME.

Just below the dam the water wheel of Euzebio, the miller, creaked noisily in its ponderous revolutions, while from the opposite bank the mill of Anselmo growled a muffled accompaniment. Friends from childhood, the lives of these two old widower millers of 70 gave a silent contradiction to the popular axiom concerning men of the same employment.

And the picturesque beauty of the spot! Behind Euzebio's mill the pasture ground sloped gently to the river's edge, and, crossing it, ran the pathway down which the mules were driven, laden with grain for the mill. Along the bank a row of tall poplars threw fantastic shadows upon the placid surface of the millpond. The river slipped easily along between its sandy margins, now glistening in the sunlight, now hiding itself within the recesses of some cane plantation and emerging at length to fall in clear and transparent streams of sparkling water upon the wheel, which churned them into a snowy whiteness.

In summer, when the water was low, the two old comrades used often to visit one another, boldly crossing the stream by the stepping stones below the dam, but when the autumn rains had swollen the slow moving river into a noisy torrent they were obliged to content themselves with calling from bank to bank.

Sometimes Euzebio would say:

"Speak louder, Anselmo. I don't hear you."

"What do you say?" the other would ask, advancing to the river's edge and leaning forward anxiously.

And Euzebio, making a speaking trumpet of his hands, would shout:

"I don't understand."

When they finally succeeded in making themselves heard, they would agree that the water wheels were more noisy than they used to be, and that the river had never been so turbulent. Ah, yes! It was the creaking of the wheels that kept them from hearing and not the weight of the years pressing upon their shoulders!

Euzebio had a son, a fine looking fellow of 22, tall, well built and as straight as an arrow. A great worker, daybreak would find him already busy in his father's mill. "He toils like a Moor!" the neighbors would say approvingly. Every one liked Simon, and he was a general favorite at the merry-making of the neighboring villages. Sometimes after one of these gatherings the priest, a staid and solemn personage, would come to remonstrate with Euzebio upon his son's behavior of the night before, whereat the old man was accustomed to shake his head reprovingly and cast down his eyes, whether to better express his condemnation or to hide the twinkle in them no one ever knew.

And Anselmo had a daughter, Margarida by name, a pretty girl of 19, with that sweet, natural beauty of the country, and her loveliness of face and form was but a fitting accompaniment to a gentle and loving disposition. Margarida and Simon had been playmates from babyhood, but when the girl had reached her fifteenth year this childish intimacy began to give place to a maidenly reserve on her part and to an attitude of chivalrous devotion on the part of her companion, while in his heart a deep and earnest love was slowly springing into life.

Margarida would feign annoyance whenever Simon summoned up the courage to speak of his love and of the pain her indifference gave to him, and with a frown on her pretty face would abruptly change the subject. The maiden's disdain of her lover's pleadings, however, merely added fuel to the passion that flamed in the heart of the young miller.

"Margarida," he said to her one day, "if thou wilt not marry me, I shall have to die a bachelor."

"There are plenty of girls, Simon."

"And see thee become another's!" cried the lad, with tears in his eyes. "I don't know what I should do—it would kill me!"

And was Margarida so cruel as really to despise the love of her childhood's friend and playfellow? Wait awhile; we shall soon see how far a woman's love and devotion can go.

At the time of which we write war had just broken out between the followers of Dom Pedro and Dom Miguel. When the terrifying news reached the village, the mothers shuddered as they looked upon their sons, returning weary from the plow.

"Nobody knows the number killed," said the messenger. "It is the end of the world!"

The next day a squad of soldiers entered the village, and, marching to Euzebio's mill, drew up line, while the officer in command, with a couple of privates, entered. A few minutes later the horror stricken neighbors saw them march away with Simon in their midst, with bound arms like a felon apprehended of justice. The father tried to follow them, but age and weakness held him back. Hearing the cries of the people, Margarida came running to the spot, and when they told her that Simon had been impressed into the service of Dom Pedro, she fell fainting in Euzebio's arms.

A week later shots were heard in the distance and the bugle calls of a battalion. A skirmish was evidently taking place near by. At midday a column of troopers passed through the village, and all pressed forward to see if Simon were among them. Yes, there he was, but how changed! Breathless and exhausted, covered with dust, his shoes in holes and clothing torn, they saw him march by, bending wearily beneath the weight of his knapsack. As he passed them he nodded to his acquaintances, while his eyes searched eagerly for a glimpse of Margarida or his father, but in vain! And so, with a heavy heart, he passed on.

When Margarida was told that her lover had just gone by, she wanted to run ahead and catch up with the battalion.

"And mingle with the rough soldiers!" cried an ancient dame. "God save us, child! Dost thou know what thou art saying?"

"Is not Simon a soldier, Aunt Joaquina?" asked the girl tearfully.

At nightfall a melancholy procession neared the village. A file of soldiers led the way. Behind them came a slow moving line of farm wagons, makeshift ambulances, filled with the wounded. There they lay, heaped together, the dead among the dying. Oh, it was a pitiful sight! The sobbing women ran from cart to cart, searching for the face of some loved one.

Suddenly, from amid the cloud of dust surrounding one of the ambulances, a faint cry was heard:

"Fa-ther! Mar-ga-rida! I am dying!"

And one of the wounded men was seen to let his head fall forward upon his breast, while from the edge of the wagon his left arm hung limply.

The soldier leading the horses of this ambulance shook his head as Margarida came running toward him, asking for her lover. The rumble of the cart wheels droned her words. Sorrowfully she turned away, but as the cart passed her the arm extended from its side caught her eye, and springing forward she seized the hand in hers, and examining with intentness a ring the dead man wore fell back into the arms of her friends, with the cry of a breaking heart:

"Oh, Simon, my love! Dead! Dead!"

When a neighbor went to Euzebio's house to tell him of his son's death, he found the old man seated on the edge of his bed, praying, with his eyes fixed on a crucifix he held in his hand.

"Pray for his soul," said the friend sadly.

The old miller, who had become very deaf, raised his head and asked in alarm, "What is it?" putting his hand to his ear.

"Dead," shouted the other.

Euzebio rose to his feet, and, with pale face and set eyes, made his way to the head of the bed, and took down an old musket that hung there.

"What is that for, Uncle Euzebio?" inquired his friend.

"I will kill them!" said the old man, in a trembling voice. "I will kill them!"

But as he crossed the threshold of his house, gun in hand, a volley rang out from the foremost squad, and the old man fell forward on his face, dead.

The next morning a neighbor's boy came running home, white with fear, sobbing and trembling, and told his mother that a little below the dam he had seen the body of a woman, drifting—drifting—

In after years I revisited the scenes of my childhood. It was a beautiful April morning. I found Margarida's father seated in front of his mill, his chair by the river's edge, enjoying the warmth of returning spring. He told me of Simon's death and of the tragic fate of his friend Euzebio, but when he began to speak of his daughter, his voice failed him, and, turning his head away, he whispered to himself:

"Oh, my Margarida!"

And silent, motionless, like a man in a dream, he gazed with fixed eyes upon the river that slid softly by his feet, as though within its depths he beheld her smiling face.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

Couldn't Congratulate Her.

M. Paul Deroulede, the French poet and dramatist, was captain of a company in the service of the Versailles government of national defense in 1871. At one time he had to lead his company against a street barricade in Paris raised by communists.

Some signs of resistance had been observed behind. As Deroulede marched his men onward, a woman sprang to the top of the barricade, aimed a chassepot rifle at the leader and fired.

The soldiers ducked their heads, but no one was hit. They marched on, Deroulede in advance. He smiled, eying calmly the woman, who leveled her gun at him and fired again. Once more no one was hit. On went the soldiers steadily, their captain smiling, the woman on the barricade continuing to charge her piece and to fire each time as nearly as she could at Deroulede.

Presently, however, the soldiers were on the barricade. The woman threw away her gun and stood with folded arms. She was one of the petroleuses—the furious fighting women of the commune. Deroulede looked behind the barricade to see who else was defending it. No one was there; the woman was alone.

Then he took off his cap, bowed low to the woman, and said very politely, "Madam, I regret exceedingly that I am unable to congratulate you, but really, in view of your markmanship, I cannot."—Youth's Companion.

ITS TRAGIC SEQUEL.

A STORY OF THE POKER PLAYING DAYS ON THE MISSISSIPPI.

A Game on the Belle of Memphis That Resulted In a Duel and the Death of Two Players—A Colored "Boy" Was Staked In the Play, but Disappeared.

"Talking about this fascinating game of poker, for instance," remarked a gentleman with whom a Tribune man was conversing in the rotunda of the Grand hotel the other night, "the first game of poker I ever witnessed had a sequel so tragic that it is invariably recalled to me every time I see a card.

"The affair occurred shortly before the war. My father, who was a very heavy producer of the fleecy staple, cotton, and whose interests were almost destroyed by a certain proclamation which proved eminently disastrous to owners of southern plantations, took me with him on a trip which he made from New Orleans to St. Louis. Our steamer, the Belle of Memphis, was crowded with passengers, nearly all of whom were males. We left New Orleans about 2 o'clock in the afternoon, and 15 minutes later there were four or five poker games in operation. Nearly everybody gambled on board in those days.

"Among the passengers on the trip were two business men from the Crescent City who were bitter enemies, but whom perverse chance had seated at the same table.

"One of them had with him a tall, athletic, fine looking negro, who acted as his body servant, and was never very far from his master's side. The 'boy' remained in the cabin and watched the play.

"Toward evening some of the players, after losing all their funds, had begun staking the cotton and other produce they had on board for the St. Louis markets. Up on deck the roustabouts were 'shooting craps' by the smoky glare of pine knots that cast weird shadows on the surging stream. Morning came and found the two merchants still playing. The big negro had made one or two attempts to speak to his master during the progress of the game, and had been ordered out of the cabin. As he came out on deck my father addressed him.

"'You seem to be greatly interested in the game, boy,' said he.

"'I is, massa,' was the reply. 'I'ze do stakes on dat han an ef de kunnel doan' win I'ze Massa Brooks' niggah, suah. I'ze mightily interested in dat ar game for suah, massa.'

"Mr. Brooks won, and I saw the colonel throw down his cards and turn the negro over to his opponent, rising dead broke.

"He went on deck, and people watched him to see if he would shoot himself or jump into the river, but he showed no signs of doing either.

"After awhile Brooks came out with a companion and began to walk up and down the deck, laughing and joking. As they passed by where Colonel Wallace was sitting he stood up, and addressing Brooks said violently:

"'You're a scoundrel and cheat!'

"Brooks seized a chair and was about to strike at the speaker, but his friend clutched his arm and prevented any violence for the time being, but as the Belle was now nearing Natchez it was quickly arranged that the time the boat remained at the wharf should be utilized in squaring accounts between the parties. The thing was quite common, and many a party of four or five that left the boats for an hour was one or two short when it returned.

"It was a glorious night. The moon was full, and shed a clear light over the scene.

"Natchez was all a-rush when we reached the wharf. It was one of the busiest of the river towns at that time, but its dismantled hotels and tumble down houses make it look like a mere ghost of its former prosperity.

"When we left the steamer and moved up the wharf, several citizens followed us, as they knew that a duel was about to be fought.

"Brooks' new property, the negro, accompanied the party, and the winner lost no opportunity of making the unfortunate 'boy' understand that he had changed masters.

"Under the bluffs from which the town takes its name of Natchez-under-the-Hill, the party halted, 15 paces were counted off, the colonel and Brooks faced each other, pistols in hand.

"'Ready! One—two—three!'

"The last word was lost in the report of Brooks' weapon. He had fired without waiting for the word to be completed.

"The colonel's pistol, still loaded, fell from his hand. He staggered, pressed his hand to his side and fell backward.

"The negro ran to his side, raised his head and rested it on his arm.

"The colonel was unconscious, gave no sign of recognition and never spoke. After a moment or two the negro said:

"'He's daid.'

"'Drop him and come along with me,' Brooks cried brutally, and he started to return to the boat.

"The negro laid his dead master's head softly down, rose to his feet, and after picking up the colonel's undischarged pistol hurried after his new master. Almost instantly came the report of a pistol, and the party hurried forward and found Brooks lying upon the ground and the negro nowhere to be seen. Brooks was dying when they reached him, having been shot through the back of the head, and he could not tell who it was that had done the deed, but some of those in the crowd were heard to remark that the colonel's 'boy' was a 'mighty valuable niggah, sah, that's what he was.'

"The bodies of the colonel and his opponent were left at Natchez, and in 15 minutes after the Belle of Memphis had left the wharf half a dozen games of poker were in full blast. It is a game I have never learned to play."—Cincinnati Tribune.

ITALY'S PRIME MINISTER.

Marquis Rudini, Who Succeeded Sig. Crispi as Minister of State.

Marquis Antonio di Rudini-Sharabbia, who succeeded Signor Crispi as Minister of State in Italy, is, like his predecessor, a Sicilian and comes from one of the aristocratic families that were scattered over the Island of Etna by the Spanish domination. He is now nearly 60 years old. At the age of 31 he was prefect at Palermo, and in that year of the revolution he tried to restore the kingdom of the two Sicilies to the house of Bourbon. This revolution was ferocious, neither giving nor accepting quarter. The triumphant population committed most abominable excesses. Human butcher shops were opened in the public squares, where the flesh of the Italian carbineers killed at the barricades was sold for next to nothing. Rudini risked popularity in order to save Italian unity. He directed the suppression of the revolt with a firmness that bordered on cruelty. The revolution was crushed and Italian unity escaped the peril of dismemberment, which had threatened it for an instant. But for many years the remembrance of this bloody and merciless suppression weighed heavily on Signor Rudini's reputation. As a politician the Marquis di Rudini took a leading rank among the rightists as soon as he was sent to parliament. His conduct during the revolution of 1866 had classed him among the fearless and resolute men. And so, after Mentana, when Emmanuel desired to begin a reactionary policy, Rudini was selected to act as minister of the interior. He was expected to show his strong qualities against the militant democracy, which was incensed at the king. The new minister showed himself equal to the expectation and was almost spiteful in his zeal against the republicans. But at the end of two months he was compelled to retire and again took his place among the right. He was not heard of again until he assumed the reins of government on the retirement of Signor Crispi in 1891. He remained in power two years, but his ministry was disastrous financially. Since that time Rudini has not been a leader in the councils of Italy.

Among the recently created peers of England is Henry Hucks Gibbs. He is a lawyer, has been a justice, is a great financier, and more or less of a politician. Mr. Gibbs is the eldest son of the late George Henry Gibbs, of Aldenham, and was born in 1819. His public school education was at Rugby, after which he attended Exeter College, Oxford, where he won his degree of B. A. in 1841. In 1844 the same college made him M. A. He is a magistrate for Middlesex and Hertfordshire, is a director in the Bank of England, and is the senior partner in the firm of Antony

PASTOR AT FOURTEEN

REV. HENRY VAN COTT BANTA A CHILD WHEN CALLED TO PREACH.

Has Been Two Years a Clergyman—Called to Take Charge of a Church by the People of Shallotte, N. C.—Now Visiting In Brooklyn.

The Rev. Henry Van Cott Banta, aged 16, is a full fledged, ordained minister of the southern conference of the Methodist Episcopal church. He is the pastor of a church in Shallotte, N. C. He was raised in Brooklyn—that is, he has lived there more years than he has lived anywhere else.

The Rev. Henry Van Cott Banta is a frail youth. He appears to be not more than 12 years old. He is hollow chested, with a pale complexion. His eyes are a light blue, his mouth small, his lips very red. He has a thoughtful brow, and he parts his hair far on one side. Just now the boy pastor is visiting his parents in Brooklyn.

When you first meet the Rev. Van Cott Banta, he approaches you with an air of great dignity. He holds his head slightly on one side. He smiles in an encouraging way. He has the ecclesiastical handshake, which consists in grasping a hand firmly and pressing it without moving it up or down.

The boy pastor's father, John W. Banta, was a Methodist preacher who has retired and is now engaged in literary work in the Bible house in this city. Occasionally he goes on an exhorting trip. The Rev. Henry was born in Kingston, Ont. His parents took him to Brooklyn when he was a baby, so he calls himself a Brooklyn boy. When the boy pastor was a little chap, his brother let him fall, injuring his left knee so that he will be lame all his life. A part of the time he is compelled to use crutches. He underwent an operation in the Seney hospital a few years ago.

About two years ago his father started on an evangelizing tour through Ohio, and as Henry was in delicate health, it was decided that he should go along. In Ohio the elder Banta joined a western evangelist named Hygema, and the three traveled, like gypsies, in a big covered wagon, holding forth wherever they could get an audience. The small and delicate Henry was converted in a small town in Ohio.

His father and the other evangelist decided to make an attack on the moonshiners in the Blue Ridge mountains. At this point the young pastor says: "It was in a log cabin in the trackless pine forests of North Carolina that I preached my first sermon. The cabin was owned by a man named Gainey, who claimed to be 114 years old."

When the peregrinating preachers reached Shallotte, N. C., which is about 40 miles south of Wilmington, the boy preacher met with remarkable success. The congregation of the church at that time was troubled with a pastor who was accused of being too varied in his affections. They liked Henry so well that they invited the frail, pale boy to become their pastor, and he accepted. He has been in charge for two years. They have given him a parsonage and a horse and wagon. He is known for miles around as a powerful exhorter. He was ordained in the church where he preaches, and was regularly admitted to the southern conference.—New York World.

A PUZZLED ENGLISHMAN.

Asks Questions on Several Questions Interesting to Many Readers.

We are bitterly complaining of foreign papers and persons on account of their criticisms and reproaches, but it surely must be difficult for foreigners to understand us. We neglect to stop the preparations for a criminal raid by our own people, and then run after the raiders with a message to return, only just in time to save ourselves from the charge of complicity, and we extol the sender of the message apparently for being too late. We repudiate the raiders, and then sharply resent any offers of congratulations to those who succeeded in stopping them. We more than half treat the raiders' cause as our own, publish in the leading journal our poet laureate's hysterical and rowdy praise of them, and generally go on the bounce against "the enemy," and insult the people our own men have so grievously wronged. No wonder the foreigner finds it difficult. I find it difficult myself, and tens of thousands of people in England are finding it specially difficult to understand why Mr. Chamberlain should be so lavishly praised for being so dangerously late.—J. Page Hopps in London Daily News.

LETTER CHAIN.

By Which Christian Women Hope to Erect a Church.

The Christian church ladies of Anderson, Ind., have started a letter chain, the purpose being the erection of a new church in that city. The matter is in the hands of a committee that has opened a complete set of books to keep track of the chain. The Catholic ladies recently put this method into effect to realize money for their hospital in this city, and it succeeded very well, giving a very good income.

The new church that is proposed by the Christian people is to cost about $40,000 all told, and they expect to raise a good part of it in this manner. They will rely almost entirely upon their own people in different Indiana cities to carry the thing along.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Peace In a Great City.

I should say that yesterday was one of the most peaceful days that has been passed by society this winter.

After a careful perusal of the papers I didn't see that one single person had sued any one else for divorce, that any one had been robbed of silver or diamonds or that the Belmont-Vanderbilt crowd had done anything to warrant any more publicity.—Cholly Knickerbocker in New York Recorder.

A HAPPY QUEEN.

But Fate Came Near Making Carola an Unhappy Empress.

Queen Carola, of Saxony, has had a happy and uneventful life, but fate at one time came very near turning her fortunes into an unhappy channel. It was at one time reported that she was about to wed Napoleon III. There was foundation for the report, but happily for Carola there was a slip in arrangements, else the fate of Eugenie might have been hers.

Carola was the only child of Gustavus Vasa, the Prince Royal of Sweden. She was born an exile from her native land and was reared among strangers. Her father lived chiefly at Morawetz, in Moravia, and it was in this place that the little princess grew up. At twenty, however, she went to Dresden, beautiful city, where most of her life has been spent since. Once a year the now Queen makes an expedition to Sigmaringen, within whose gates she finds many of her valued friends. Queen Carola has no child of her own, and King Albert will be succeeded by the descendants of his brother George. This nobleman married Maria, the infanta of Portugal. She was a sister of the Princess of Hohenzollern Sigmaringen. Princess George died in 1884, and since then the Queen of Saxony has devoted much of her life to the care of the motherless children.

GENERAL AZCARRAGA.

Spanish Minister of War Has Shown Shown Himself to Be an Intriguer.

General Azcarraga, the Spanish Minister of War, has shown himself to be an adept intriguer, if not an able director of armies. For many years he and the disgraced General Campos were at daggers' points. The feeling between them was bitter, and, although Azcarraga tried every means in his power to cloud the soldier, his opportunity did not seem to come until the war in Cuba presented itself for solution, and it was through his advice, or petition that Campos was made commander of the Spanish troops in Cuba. In Cuba Campos was a dead lion, so far as home intrigue went, and his enemy at Madrid watched every chance to finish him off. The cause of Cuba prospered, and the reports were never favorable to Campos' campaign. It was here that Azcarraga tightened his grip about the throat of his enemy in a thoroughly effectual way. Campos might never have been ordered home in disgrace were it not for the machinations of the war minister, who, although having no great power in the actual conduct of the campaign, had force enough to put this last nail in General Campos' coffin by having him recalled.

GENERAL AZCARRAGA.

A little country boy who had to go to a lady's house on business was put into a room where there were some silhouettes—portraits cut out in black paper—on the mantel-piece. The lady, noticing that the boy was attracted by them, said:

At which the child replied, with a look of astonishment:

TRAPPED LIKE A RAT

A MARINE ENGINEER RELATES AN AWFUL EXPERIENCE.

Shut Up In the Fire Box of a Tug With the Tug Leaking at a Frightful Rate—A Deliverance That Promises to Remain Forever a Mystery.

Marine engineers have their shares of startling experiences. George J. Little tells a story of being trapped in the fire box of a boiler. In just such circumstances the hair sometimes turns gray.

"I can never forget it if I live to be 100 years old," said Mr. Little. "It occurred on an old Buffalo tug named after C. M. Farrar of the firm of Farrar & Trefts of this city. The tug is gone where all good tugs go, but the memory of that few minutes I spent trapped like a rat in her fire box comes back to me often, and I wonder if the man who was with me that afternoon remembers it as vividly as I do.

"It was late in the year, along in December, I think. We were laying up for the cold. We had been breaking ice all the week previous, and the old tug was leaking badly, so badly, in fact, that we had been obliged to pump her out with a tin pump twice that afternoon. It was cold, and we wanted to get through with our job while it was light, so we spent very little time on the pump, and at no time did we pump her dry. We kept the water off the fire hole floor so we would not be obliged to work in the water, and that was about all. We intended to pump her thoroughly after we had finished our other work. There were two jobs we could do after dark. One was the pumping and the other was oiling the inside of the fire box.

"When a tug is laid up for the winter, you know, the boiler and every bright part of the engine is painted over with oil to prevent it rusting. The inside of the fire box is one of the particular places, and the owner of the tug had cautioned us not to slight it. That was one of the reasons we had put it off till the last thing. Besides, we had to use a torch, so it made no difference if it was dark outside.

"It is necessary that you understand the construction of the boiler to have a clear idea of the situation. The boiler was an ordinary marine boiler, such as we used ten years ago. It had water legs and a water bottom, with a damper opening about 5 inches wide extending across the front of the boiler. The furnace door was such as you will see on any tug in Buffalo today. It was about 2 feet one way and 18 inches the other. The opening which it covered was a trifle smaller, but was plenty large enough to allow a man to crawl through it. The door fastened by a heavy latch on the outside, which dropped into place whenever the door was shut. Inside the fire box there was plenty of room for two men to sit or kneel and work. The grates were removed and there was the room from the ash pan, which was the water bottom, to the crown sheet. Of course, it was not an inviting place, nor large enough for a clubroom, but there was room for the two of us to work, and as two can do more work than one we crawled in, one after the other. The one nearest the door, I forget now whether it was my companion or myself, reached out the door and handed in the oil, brushes and the torch. We put the torch in the opening of the flue in the back of the fire box and started to work. The draft through the door into the flue was so strong that it threatened to blow the light out, so my companion said to me, 'Shut the door.'

"Without thinking I reached out and pulled the door shut. In an instant I realized the situation. I turned to at my companion and saw that he understood. We were in the furnace of the boiler, with the only exit locked. We had both heard the heavy latch of the door drop into place. The tug that we were on was leaking so badly that she would sink in a few hours unless some assistance came. Even then we could see the water slowly crawling over the fire hole floor. If we called, it would do no good. We could hardly be heard on deck, and there was no one within half a mile of us. The damper hole was not large enough to allow a boy to pass through it, to say nothing of a man. All these thoughts ran through our minds in a second. We were perfectly familiar with the situation and knew our chances were slim. I will never forget that scene. Before me sat my companion in a half crouched position, his face thrown into bold relief by the blackness of the iron behind him. The flickering light of the torch gave the face, with the firm set jaw, an awful expression. I remember, as I looked into the face that looked into mine with brave eyes, the thought came to me, 'Will I meet it as bravely as he?'

"The man with me was the son of the owner of the boat and my cousin. He was game to the fullest meaning of the word, and I knew it. We looked at each other for at least a minute. It seemed a century. I was waiting for him to speak and he for me. I could not. The situation was hopeless. I saw his eyes travel to the door, then to the damper and then to the flue in which the torch flickered feebly. Then his eyes again sought mine as he asked in a low, distinct voice, 'Did the door latch?'

"I put my hand against it and pushed. It did not give. I nodded my head. I could not speak. He half lifted himself and kicked the door with his foot, and it swung open. The draft of air put the light out, and in that moment of darkness I thanked God.

"To this day I cannot understand how that latch lifted, or if it did not drop, why?"—Buffalo Express.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.

FRIDAY, MAY 22 ..... 1896

There is going to be a vast influx of strangers into Russia this year, many of them Americans, to attend the coronation of the Czar. It is going to be gorgeous. The coronation ceremonies of Alexander II. cost $12,000,000. Alexander III spent $10,000,000. Czar Nicholas II. expects to spend in the five hours' ceremony $20,000,000, or more than $1000 a second for placing two crowns on the heads of two young persons, says the Argonaut. One hundred and fifty thousand troops will be mobilized for the ceremony; fifty thousand soldiers will be used to guard the rail-way route of the Emperor and Empress from their Winter home to the Moscow citadel. The remaining 100,000 soldiers will be concentrated in and around Moscow, guarding every highway, watching every street and forming double walls of armed men between which the Czar and Czarina and their glittering pageant will proceed through the Gate of the Redeemer to the Empress Katharine's apartments in the Kremlin.

A procession of grand dukes and grand duchesses, generals, admirals will march to the throne room to see the Czar and Czarina ascend the throne, which has just been recanopied at an expense of $750,000. The imperial pair will leave the throne escorted by a guard of generals and will go to the cathedral where they will take their places on the newly gemmed throne. The metropolitans of Novgorod, Moscow, and Kieff will attend them. Members of the diplomatic corps will have seats provided at a respectful distance, while foreign royal princes and members of the imperial Russian family will gather at a balustrade which sets off the throne from the rest of the church. After the religious services, which will last an hour, the high court officials will assist the Czar to put on his ermine mantle and his great chain with the cross of St. Andrew and will hand him the septre and the imperial sphere. The Czar will take his crown and place it on his head and then will place the Czarina's crown on her head. He will be anointed by the metropolitan of Moscow will kiss the Bible and take communion. Immediately after the ceremony the imperial banquet will begin. This will cost $2,500,000 much of it for new gold table service. There are to be 200 cooks, with 1500 assistants. There will be no waiters; the imperial couple will be waited upon by generals of the army, while the high clergy and imperial princes will be served by officers of lesser rank. The delegation from foreign countries will number 2000. The delegations from all parts of Russia will number 50,000. The foreign princes, royal and otherwise, will number about 200. Moscow will be crowded. The hotels have had no rooms to rent since January 1. The number of visitors will exceed 300,000 and some think 500,000. People of wealth will be very numerous there and even the possessors of both titles and wealth will find it difficult to gain admittance to some of the desired places.

People are starving in New York city to-day and potatoes are sold by Canadigna farmers at three cents a bushel. In the Genesee country, says the New York Journal, potatoes are burned as fuel. Ontario county potatoes are worth only 83 cents a ton, while coal costs $5 a ton. The ruin and desolation that is being wrought by the gold power and their parasites at Washington is awful to contemplate. The editor of one of the most influential papers in Nebraska writes Mr. B. O. Flower, editor of the Arena, as follows: "You cannot conceive the awful poverty of the people in every section of this state. I received yesterday a letter from a prominent citizen in the northern part of the state saying that hundreds of farmers have not had one cent of money in their pockets for weeks. What few things they can buy are procured by trading eggs or small farm products at the country store. They are travelling back to the age of barter.

The depression in silver mining caused Congress in '93 and '94 to suspend for those two years that part of the Federal mining law requiring an annual expenditure of $100 in work or improvement on an unpatented mining claim. That consession ceased in '94. While, individually, the enforcement of the law may work hardship, yet in general that requirement is a good one. If a man cannot hold a claim he had better relinquish it. A miner or prospector is not confined to the ownership of one claim; he can take up and hold twenty if he complies with the law. Many do take up more than they can manage, and that tends to keep back the development of the district. General justice requires that a man should either work a claim at least to the little extent required by the letter of the law, or else give it up.

The official trial trip of the battleship Oregon on Thursday of last week in Santa Barbara channell was one of great industrial importance to the coast, which with the vessell's builders, the Union Iron Works, is to be congratulated on the result. To successfully compete with the Atlantic coast shipbuilders is no small triumph, and the product of a Pacific Coast Shipyard now takes her place at the head of the great battleships of the American Navy. The $175,000 extra bonus earned by the builders is a trifle in comparison to the credit that will accrue to them, to California and the entire Coast as the result of last week's performance.

We have received the annual report of the California State Mining Bureau, showing the Mineral productions of the different counties of the State for the Year of '95. Any citizen of the State can obtain a copy of the same free, by addressing the California State Mining Bureau, No. 24 South Street, San Francisco Calif. and enclosing a two cent stamp for postage.

JACK'S TRUE YARNS.

THE OLD NORTH WOODS GUIDE TELLS TWO GOOD STORIES.

How He Captured a Bear With No Weapon but His Boot Toes—He Was Once Saved From Freezing by a Bottle of Kerosene and Some Matches.

Jack Ormiston is still alive to tell some of the most wonderful tales that are heard in the Adirondacks. Jack has been a guide for some 30 years, ever since he has been big enough to carry a pack basket. He is tall and loose jointed, and his muscles are as hard as hickory knots. His black grizzled beard covers nearly all of his broad face. A pair of small, blinking black eyes do most of his talking for him, but when he is properly aroused he can spin a tale at the camp fire that will startle the screech owls and frighten the wailing loons down on the lake shore.

"Yer've heerd some of the fellers say, hain't yer, how I kotched that old bear last fall?" asked Jack.

We assured him that we never had, and it was strictly true, because he had told us a dozen or more times himself.

"Waal, yer must know where Tully pond is," continued Jack. "Blessed if I don't kotch a bear mighty queer there last fall. Jim Hodge give me a lift on the job, I must say, but that ain't the point. Fact is, the great point wuz the toe end of these boots. I wuz comin down this way along ther trail when I heerd a rustling overhead in a tall pine. Golly, when I looked up, kinder quick, sideways, fer I feerd somethin wuz goin ter drop, I see a mighty big bear comin along one of the limbs toward the trunk.

"He started ter come down the trunk back end first, winkin at me. My gun wuz over at camp. I didn't have a thing with me, and Jim wuz half a mile back on the trail. That bear I could see had a mighty fine hide that would bring me somethin like $30, with the bounty. I didn't care ter have him run away, nor did I want ter shake hands with him and pass the time of day with him till Jim come along and put him asleep with a bullet. I didn't make up my mind none too soon. The bear warn't half way down the tree when I rushed at him, not knowin what I would do ter own that hide and capture the bounty. I looked around fer a club, but none come in sight, so when I got ter the foot of the tree there warn't nothin but one thing ter do. I just hauled off and kicked that bear.

"It wuz the first experimentin of the kind I ever heerd of, and by gosh it beat anything I ever see. The bear clawed hard inter the bark and snapped at me. He was easin up a bit with his nails when I swung him another and another. I yelled for Jim and swung again. I yelled six times, kickin between every yell. Then Jim answered, and I kept up yellin and kickin, first with one boot and then the other. The bear didn't drop an inch. Just as he eased up a little bit I swung again. Gosh! It seemed as if Jim wuz takin his time comin along that trail. Just as I swung the forty-ninth kick Jim come in sight. I dropped flat on my back. Jim popped one inter the bear, and it flopped over on ter me. Jim wuz the most surprised man yer ever see. It wuz two hours before I could prove ter him that I wuz tellin the truth about that bear."

Then Jack piled another log on the fire and started in on a new tale.

"This spring I come near bein done fer," he said. "Kerosene kept me in pickle long enough ter get near a fire, and then I wuz all right again."

We wanted to know if kerosene oil wasn't a new beverage for him.

"No, I didn't drink none," he continued. "I started ter cross Brandy brook on a log. I wanted ter cut off a three mile walk around by the trail. The water wuz high, and there wuz a strong current running out inter the lake. This log wuz about a foot and a half through. I rolled it off with the stream. I tucked my breeches in my boots and straddled the log. I hadn't kicked a dozen strokes before I got out inter the swift water, and then I could see I wuz in fer it. I kicked ter back up again ter the shore, but it wuz no use, so I let it go. It came on dark, and my feet began ter freeze. My old boots had been well greased, but the water dripped in at the tops and soaked my stockin's. I tried kickin harder ter keep my blood stirred up. I drifted over toward Bear mountain, and knew that if the wind kept up I would land somewhere before midnight. Just as I wuz gettin almighty froze I thought of a bottle of kerosene I had to oil my gun. Yer can bet I wuz wishin it wuz somethin more cheerin than kerosene oil. A little alkehal and sugar at that time would er slipped down inter them boots from the inside and melted them frozen toes, but there warn't nuthin but kerosene. I poured it half and half inter each boot, and I know it helped ter make me easy ter a time. But by and by it seemed ter me the oil must be freezin too. It wuz lucky I had my old matchbox along in my vest pocket, high and dry, fer then the idea struck me that if I lit a match and sent it down inter the oil it would warm things up some. There warn't much else ter do er think erbout. I wuz makin fer Bear Mountain island slow, but steady. If I didn't get there till midnight, my feet would both be froze off, so I made up my mind ter try the matches. Lucky fer me my boots had wide tops so I could send the lit match right down ter the bottom where it 'ud do the most good. Well, sir, the first match in the right boot did the trick fine. It took fire and thawed things out quicker'n I thought. Blisters raised all over, and when it all got scalded all comfortable I wriggled around and put out the fire. Then I tried it on the left foot, and it worked just as well. There wuz enough matches left to start a fire on the island when I drifted in there toward 12 o'clock."

John Shepherd returned to Keeler last Monday.

P. H. Mack Esq. is expected home this evening.

Bodie has the largest cyanide plant in the world.

There were several drummers in town the past week.

Dr. I. J. Woodin visited Big Pine the first of the week.

Leon Marks returned from a visit to Idaho last Friday.

Mr. E. Trulo of Big Pine spent the day in town last Saturday.

Prof. Morris returned home to Bishop last Tuesday morning.

Ed. Rose has a number of men at work on a ditch at Fish Springs.

Johnnie Ramsey returned from a visit to Los Angeles last Saturday.

June Smith arrived from the south with his big team last Saturday.

Wm. Arcularius has turned his team out on pasture at Georges' Creek.

There will be a meeting of the Democratic Central Committee to morrow.

B. Aguirre arrived from Bodie last Monday. He will return in a short time.

F. McIver of Citrus attended the Republican State Convention from this district.

Several fishing parties have been up on the creek already and camped over night.

John Schober passed through town yesterday with his big team en-route to Bishop.

H. M. Yerington's special car went down the road last Friday and returned Sunday.

It is reported that two new mills are being built near Resting Springs in this County.

Mrs. Jones of Fish Springs, who was so ill a short time back, has about recovered.

Arthur Nobles and Geo. Naylor are packing ore for Pat. Keys in Beveridge District.

S. P. McKnight of Bishop was in town the past week. He returned Thursday morning.

Louis Schabbell was thrown from a horse last Thursday and received several bad bruises.

The river over at the Independence bridge has not risen a half an inch as yet this year.

It is reported that there will be a change of management at the Hirsh mill in a short time.

The judgement in the Hale & Norcross mining suit was in favor of the plaintiff for nearly $1,000,000.

Mrs. I. H. Mulholland left last Thursday morning for a visit with relatives west of the mountains.

Fred W. Holbert spent several days in town this week. He returned to Big Pine yesterday morning.

J. C. Miller went down to Keeler last Monday, went over to Darwin and returned to Independence Thursday.

Four thousand feet of eleven-inch pipe are on the road from Carson to be used in the hydraulic claims at Mono Lake—Miner.

It costs about $4,750 per shot to fire one of Krupp's 140-ton steel guns. The gun costs $195,000 and can be fired only sixty times at the most. The gun has a range of fifteen miles, and the projectiles weigh twenty-six hundred pounds.

From Aberdeen.

Mrssrs Conklin and Rodgers have the mining craze.

W. A. Moore is cutting timber for J. Commetti, to be used in the mine.

Mrs. Jas. Jenkins has returned from Georges' Creek much improved in health.

Matthew Duke is doing the pumping at Tibbits Station during the absence of Mr. Calvert.

The public school of Taboose District will close with appropriate exercises next Friday.

Mrs. Ira Calloway expects to leave Tuesday for Washington, to spend the Summer visiting friends and relatives on Puget Sound.

Will Hines is teaming at Big Pine, where he expects to be engaged for the Summer.

Mrs. G. D. Calvert has been visiting her husband at Keeler the past week. G. D. expects to remain there until after June 1st.

Col. A. A. Niel has turned prospector, and it is no unusual sight to see him with a small burro packed with tools and provisions meandering towards the hills.

J. W. Calloway is again at work in the Inyo Mountains getting out wood for the Railroad Company. He has a number of men cutting wood, and the packing is being done by a train of mules superintended by two Mexicans of Bishop.

One hears nothing now a days but "quartz" dry washing" and "placer." Every one has turned prospector. Even the little children have caught the fever and sit for hours over a morter, looking for "colors." Your corrospondant has seen no less than ten men in the last five days going into the Inyo range, coming back heavily ladened with sand or quartz to wash or horn. We've heard of no one "striking it rich" as yet, but the patience and perserverance manifested is simply marvelous.

NONPARIEL.

Tecopa.

Mr. John C. Black of Resting Springs tells a couple of reminessences about our townsman Wells Barnes which are worth reporting. More than and about a quarter of a century age, when the Indians were bad and quartz hunters were braving the deserts thereabouts, Messrs. Barnes, Black, the Lee boys and others surveyed a townsite and called it Tecopa. The Shoshone dialect consists mainly of two-letter sylables; the combination had an original if not euphonious sound and was the name of an old chief. Uncle Sam gave them a postal service for a while some time afterwards, but the Indian words Te Co Pah rendered unto white American talk means "the sheep's arm." When this came to be known Wells is said to have felt bad for a few days. Upon one epoch flour became scarce; it was beans straight with the whole camp. A Mormon rancher pulled into town with a load of the breadstuff and also a realization that twenties were more plentiful, comparatively speaking. Twenty dollars for each 50-pound sack was the only basis of exchange to at all considered by him until Wells casually joined the crowd. Wells informed them that his team with his load of flour was due on the following morning, when they all could have all they wanted for $7 50 per sack. Then the Mormon hastily began selling at that rate and less until he was unloaded of all flour and some avarice. Having knocked down the price of the commodity by his timely invention of an imaginary team, Mr. Barnes became known as "the flour merchant."

Silver Peak

Correspondence of the Walker Lake Bulletin states:

Our camp is quiet at present, but the mill and leaching works are running steadily and a large amount of gold bullion is being shipped to the mint every month. There are not a great many men at work either at the mine or mill, but should the ore continue to pay as at present the prospects for the future are bright.

Reports from Alida Valley are favorable. Barnes and Keyser have out a shipment of 1000-ounce silver ore. Bowers & Poor are taking out ore from a large body which is even richer.

There is a little gold being shipped from Tule Canyon, and Louis Chiatovich has a mill on the way which he will erect on a mine south of old Gold Mountain. He has his men on the ground ready to begin work as soon as the machinery arrives, and having made a thorough test of the ore, he feels confident of being able to cyanide it to good advantage. If it should prove to be the case there will be another mine added to our list of gold producers.

Lectures

Prof. Morris arrived last Friday for the purpose of fulfilling his engagement here, as had been announced for last Friday, Saturday and Sunday evenings. Friday was a very disagreeable day, the wind blew all day and continued through the evening making it unpleasant to venture out, and as a consequence there was not a very large audience out to meet the Professor the first evening. The next two preceeding evenings, however, the weather was favorable and the house was well filled. Prof. Morris proved an interestin speaker and held the attention of the audience very closely. The lectures were delivered, as had been announced. 'The Wonders of Prophecy,' on Friday evening, showed a close study of the subject, and 'The Common Man,' kept the audience amused the following evening. After the lecture Sunday evening the Professor announced that if desired, he would deliver another address the following evening. The subject, 'Prophecy and the Jews' proved interesting as it dealt largely on questions of the day. The net proceeds cleared amounted to a little over $18.

To Whom It May Concern.

Notice is hereby given that from and after this date I will not be responsible for any bills run, or debts contracted, by my sons, Ned and Frank McGann.

PETER MCGANN.

Dated May 20, 1896.

At the last meeting of the Board of Supervisors the Great Register was ordered cancelled and a new regesteration ordered. County Clerk Hession is now preparing a new Register as will be seen by pursual of his "notice to voters" published in another column of this issue. Registeration opens on the 27th of this month and closes seventy-five days before the general election next November.

Business is reported very dull on the C. P. R. R. Probably Huntington is ordering all business possible to be conducted on his other lines for the purpose of making the people believe the road ain't worth the Government's taking.

Neil McLean arrived from Mojave yesterday morning. He says business is lively down that way, and he will move his family down, as he has steady employment teaming from Mojave to a new mining camp about fifty miles out on the desert.

It is reported that Louis Josephs of Big Pine has removed his store across the street, into the building formerly occupied by Thomas & Hill.

Mr. C. F. Bassett of San Francisco arrived last Thursday morning. He comes mostly for his health and will remain for a few days.

Mrs. J. N. Rose returned from Keeler yesterday morning, where she has been visiting with her daughter, Mrs. J. J. Morton.

Joe Burkwalter came in from Beveridge last evening. He came for supplies and to have some pipes fixed for the engine.

Mustard Poultice.

Mix a large tablespoonful of mustard with a half pint of cornmeal, pour on this hot (not boiling) water and stir on a good fire until it is thick. A little molasses added to this detracts from the danger of the poultice sticking. When the mixture is cooked thick enough, spread between two pieces of thin muslin, and lay smoothly upon the aching spot. The amount given above will make two or three ordinary poultices.

BEAUTIFUL THOUGH PAINFUL.

We sing "Come Gentle Spring" and are often very sorry that we did anything of the kind, for Spring, though beautiful, is sometimes very painful. The very luxury we enjoy in the return of the balmy air is the latent source of a great many pains and aches. It is because the nerves are relaxed in this way that they become weak and an easy prey to sudden attacks of neuralgia; a tonic of cold healthful air braces them up and makes them strong against any such attack, but the sudden change to warmth makes them liable to be preyed upon by this disease. For this simple reason the great nerve disorder has many victims at this time, but we have in St. Jacobs Oil something that restores the tone, vigor and strength of the nerves to what they had been. The prompt use of it in these neuralgic attacks of springtime is sure to be followed by a perfect cure.

Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness, without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, then laxatives or other remedies are not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, then one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction.

A COMING MAN.

John K. Cowen, the New President of the Baltimore and Ohio.

John K. Cowen, member of Congress from the Fourth Maryland district, who was recently elected to the presidency of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, has been prominent in the politics of his State for many years. He is said to be in close contact with President Cleveland, and it is argued that in view of this fact and the political enmity existing between Mr. Cowen and Senator Gorman, Mr. Cowen's selection as president of the Baltimore and Ohio has no little political significance.

Mr. Cowen was born in Ohio about 55 years ago. He was graduated from Princeton College, at which institution he formed an intimate acquaintance with Robert Garrett, which is responsible for Mr. Cowen's present influential position. The intimacy was continued after the young men left college, and at the suggestion of his father, John W. Garrett, then at the head of the Baltimore and Ohio road, Mr. Garrett induced Mr. Cowen to settle in Baltimore and enter the service of the road in the legal department. Mr. Cowen did so and was rapidly advanced, becoming general counsel in 1872. He remained in that capacity until his election as president of the road recently.

JOHN K. COWEN.

Easily Satisfied.

A manufacturer of tombstones in a flourishing provincial town one day received a call from a customer who wished to buy a stone for his mother's grave. After looking anxiously about for some time and making numerous remarks as to his mother's taste he finally fixed his gaze upon a stone which the stone-cutter had prepared for another person.

"I like this one," he said, decidedly; "I'll take this."

"But that belongs to another man," remonstrated the stonecutter, "and it has the name 'Francis' cut on it, you see; that wouldn't do for your mother."

"Oh, yes, it would," responded the countryman. "Mother couldn't read; and besides," he added, as he saw the stonecutter's expression, "she'd like it all the better if she could read, for Francis was always a favorite name of hers, anyhow."

The story is suggestive of one told of a London tradesman suddenly grown rich, who, having set up his carriage in great state, went to a harnessmaker to have a silver letter put on the blinders of his horses.

"What is the initial?" asked the harnessmaker.

"The what?" said the rich man, looking blank.

"What letter shall I put on?" inquired the harnessmaker, suppressing his amusement.

"Well, I hadn't quite made up my mind," answered the customer, "but I guess W is about as handsome a letter as any, isn't it?"

Electricity on Japanese War Vessels.

The firing of great guns and the explosion of shells appear to have the effect of disarranging some of the electrical devices on warships. The Japanese legation in Paris has forwarded to the French government a report relating to the recent naval combats, in which it is stated, with regard to the electric installations on board the Mikado's warships, that the interruptions of current which took place were not caused, as has been said, by the recoil of the guns, but by the bursting of Chinese shells. The working of the ordinance maneuvered by electricity was not interfered with. The electric wires used for igniting charges were, however, broken by the vibration set up by the firing of the heavy guns.

His Price a Difficulty.

"Every man has his price," sententiously announced the philosopher of the all night drug store, where the street railroad franchise was being discussed.

"Well," said the wit of the establishment, "I wish somebody would discover my price and offer it to me."

"My boy," solemnly remarked the perfumery drummer, who had not spoken before that evening, "there is no smaller coin made than a cent."

And for several seconds there was no sound heard save the drip, drip of the real mineral waters from the hydrant.—Buffalo Express.

Wanted It Out.

An old highland sergeant in one of the Scottish regiments was going his rounds one night to see that all the lights were out in the barrick rooms. Coming to a room where he thought he saw a light shining, he roared out, "Put oot that light there!"

One of the men shouted back, "It's the mune, sergeant!"

Not hearing very well, the sergeant cried in return: "I dinna care a tacket what it is! Put it oot!"—Scotsman.

An inexhaustible good nature is one of the most precious gifts of heaven, spreading itself like oil over the troubled sea of thought and keeping the mind smooth and equable in the roughest weather.—W. Irving.

SOUTH AFRICAN COOKERY.

The Native Bill of Fare Carries Dismay to the White Man.

A very palatable dish is made of an elephant's foot by putting it in a hole, building a fire around and over it and keeping it going for five or six hours. Elephant's tail is said to be very delicious when washed, scraped and fried until it is a rich brown. A novel way of making a stew is practiced by one tribe, who use the animal's skin as a receptacle for water. Put in this water vegetables and pieces of meat and then add redhot stones. This generates vast quantities of steam and makes the water boil without injuring greatly the surrounding hide. At the end of an hour the contents are cooked and the water has become a very fair soup, but a little peculiar on account of the amount of cinders, sand and fragments of stone it contains. Still another tribe cook locusts, grasshoppers, katydids and the like, and say they taste a great deal like an overcooked shrimp. None of the native tribes, so far as known, ever eat the lion, but they have no such feeling toward other carnivora.

The jackal, wolf and fox are more or less popular, and are reported to give a very palatable meat. Where our people hang mutton, game and the immortal goose to season it and give it a rich flavor, many South American tribes secure the same result by burying meat in the earth and leaving it there for several days. No civilized man has ever been able to eat it in this condition, but the savages pronounce it a delicacy of extraordinary merit. Not alone is cannibalism practiced to a large extent, but our Darwinian cousins of the monkey tribe share the same fate. In the districts where they are employed as food they are very timid and fly at the sight of a human being even at great distance. In other territories, where they are unmolested, they are about as tame and fearless as in South America or India. In nearly all of these tribes the woman is the cook and the waiter, very often the butcher and sometimes the hunter.—New York Mail and Express.

CANNIBAL PLANTS.

They Are Sure to Languish When Deprived of Their Diet of Meat.

It has been proved time and again that the so called "cannibal plants," of which the Venus fly trap is the type, are much more healthy when allowed their regular insect food than when they are reared under netting or in any other manner which excludes them from their regular meat diet. The above is an oddity of itself, especially when we consider the fact that there is a certain school of botanists which teaches that cannibal plants make no use whatever of the insect prey captured by them, but it is nothing compared with the bold assertion made by Francis Darwin. That noted scientific gentleman bravely meets the "vegetarian botanist" with the assertion that all kinds and classes of plants, whether known as "meaters" or not, bear more and heavier fruits and seeds when fed on meat than those that are not allowed a flesh diet. He grew two lots, comprising various varieties of the different common plants.

One lot was regularly fed, through their roots of course, with pure juices compressed from meat, the other with water and the various fertilizers. The final figures on this experiment proved that the plants which were fed pure meat juice bore 168 fruits of the different kinds, while the unfed plants of the same number and original condition bore but 74; also, that the pampered plants bore 240 seeds to every 100 borne by the plants that were not given a chance to gratify cannibalistic taste. This is certainly a discovery worthy of much careful study and extensive experiment.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

The Armenians.

F. Marion Crawford, the novelist, who has met many Armenians in the east, says of them: "I doubt whether they are the innocent, confiding, inoffensive Christians that the American people believe them to be. My experience with them is that they are the sharpest, shrewdest and trickiest of all the eastern people. They say in Turkey that it takes ten Jews to equal one Armenian and five Armenians to equal one Persian in sharp business dealings. They have many able men among them, and I doubt not that their leaders have to a certain extent fomented this trouble, hoping that the governments of Europe would interfere and that Armenia would be entirely freed from Turkish rule."

In regard to the Turks he says: "I would rather trade with a Turk or a Jew in any part of the east than with a Christian. I have the highest respect for Christianity, but the Christians of the east are not like us. The business men among them are to a large extent a set of sharpers, so much so that the words oriental Christian in the minds of eastern travelers is almost synonymous with that of thief. The Turks are, as a rule, very devout. Nearly all of them read the Koran, and even the men of the better classes are careful to conform to the details of everyday Mohammedan worship."—New York Tribune.

Sulphur.

A curious chemical result of experiments made by Strindberg, as noted in Annales Industrielles, is that sulphur is not only not a simple body, but not even an original one, being simply a common fossil rosin or bitumen. He finds that when sulphur is melted at about 20 degrees, it disengages an odor of turpentine or camphor, and if a trace of iodine be added the odor becomes more marked. If it be heated anew to between 160 degrees and 230 degrees, it loses oxygen and drops to the level of caoutchouc, of which latter it assumes the color and consistency; then, if the brown and viscous liquid which is obtained in this manner be cooled, it preserves its nature for a certain length of time, and then resumes its state of rosin.

The Terrible African Fever.

During 1882 we built Kimpoko and Gobila stations, explored the Kwa and Mifini rivers, and discovered Lake Leopold II, but on returning from this voyage I was attacked by a violent fever. It was my second experience of the dangerous hematuric type. I was unconscious for days, and on recovering my senses found that my legs had swollen to an immense size. For a month afterward it appeared to me as if a quarter of a hundredweight of mercury had been injected into each leg.—Henry M. Stanley in Century.

LOGGING CYPRESS.

A PECULIAR LUMBER INDUSTRY IN SOUTHERN SWAMPS.

Negroes Who Girdle and Fell Trees While Standing Waist Deep In Water—Log Trolleys Operated by Powerful Engines Set Up In Pullboats.

Cypress lumber has not made much progress in the markets of this city, but it is difficult to convince a southerner that it is not the coming wood for both interior and exterior construction, and its constantly increasing popularity in the southern states has led to enormous investments in cypress swamp land, logging machinery and mills for working up the logs into planks, moldings, shingles and other building material.

Cypress logging is an amphibious sort of a business. The best of the trees grow in so called swamps, which are often merely forests through which the living water courses toward the sea in a thousand channels. It is seldom found on stagnant swamp land, and the best timber grows where clear running water circulates round the roots of the giant trees. There are hundreds of such places in Florida and Louisiana.

Live cypress timber is so heavy that it sinks if felled when green, and consequently the lumbermen have to work from eight months to a year in advance of the cutting to prepare the timber by girdling the trees and thus preventing the circulation of the sap. Thousands of trees are killed thus far in advance of the felling. Girdling is both arduous and dangerous work. It is done by negro choppers who stand often waist deep in water in the haunts of the dreaded moccasin snake, the alligator and the wildcat, to say nothing of the swarms of mosquitoes and other equally pestiferous insects. The negroes endure all the hardships for $1 a day.

On the picturesque Ocklawaha river, in Florida, one phase of the cypress lumber industry is seen to the best advantage. This wonderful river is fed by clear, cold springs of tremendous volume, and it winds for many miles through endless acres of moss draped cypress trees. It has hundreds of loops, or branches, which leave it at one point only to return to it at another, between its source and its junction with the St. Johns.

Between the main river and the branches, which are all more or less navigable, is flooded forest land through which the water slowly circulates to the depth of 2 or 3 and sometimes 4 or 5 feet. It is in these flooded tracts that the cypress trees grow to perfection. One company, with headquarters at Palatka and an office at Boston, controls the lumbering on this river. The company bought 300,000 acres of cypress land for 50 cents to $2 an acre, and several years ago engaged a number of sturdy loggers from Saginaw, Mich., to take charge of the work. It was all new to the Michiganders, but they took hold with aptness and quickly broke in the negroes to the work. Soon the dark recesses of the Ocklawaha swamp resounded with the blows of the ax, the shouts of men, and the crashing of the old giants as they broke through the branches of their neighbors and fell with a prodigious splash into the waters of the swamp. Then above all could be heard the rattling, jarring and clanking of the novel logging machinery as it snaked the huge logs from the recesses of the swamp to the swift stream upon which they were rafted to the big river.

A logging camp in this swamp consists of a bunkboat with a kitchen attached and a pullboat. The pullboat contains a powerful hoisting engine, and is secured with its square bow to the bank against a tall and sturdy cypress tree, denuded of branches and decorated with a band of red cloth near the top. Stretching away from an elevated point upon this tree to another similar giant a quarter of a mile back in the swamp is a taut steel cable, from which depends a trolley or carrier attached to an endless steel cable, which winds and unwinds upon the spool of the engine.

Attached to the trolley is a huge pair of sharp pronged tongs capable of spanning a log 5 feet in diameter. Leading away from the boat is a well marked lane traversed by the trolley. Trees are cleared away on each side of the cable to the full extent of its grasp, and the lane terminates only where the end tree of the trolley line stands. This point reached, the cable is taken down and another lane soon radiates from the pullboat. When five or six lanes have been made, the tract has been pretty well cleared of serviceable trees, and the boat and clamp are moved to a new point.

When a cypress is felled in one of these lanes, it is cross cut in lengths of 12 to 16 feet, and the jaws of the grapnel or a bight of chain grip the end lying toward the boat. A whoop from the foreman of the gang notifies the engineer, who blows his whistle and starts the engine. As the conveyor cable tightens, the forward end of the log rises clear of the water and stumps and the other end trails through the water, sending up fountains of spray as it rears over knees and stumps and splashes in the open pools. Sometimes a venturesome negro straddles the log, and, clinging to the chain or grapnel, rides out to the houseboat to get his dinner or grind an ax. It is a wild ride, and appears far more thrilling than the spectacle of a tenderfoot upon a bucking broncho.

This, however, is only one of the numerous cypress industries in Florida, and there are many more of the same kind in Louisiana and Alabama, where living watercourses penetrate the cypress swamps. Where there is not good waterway in Louisiana an even more costly plant is used frequently. A sawmill is placed at the edge of a cypress swamp and from the slabs and sawdust of the nearby trees a railroad bed is built out into the swamp, and the place of the pullboat is taken by a heavy flat car, secured to nearby trees with guy ropes, and having on board a powerful pulling engine.—New York Sun.

Not Worthy a Wife.

The missing bridegroom is getting numerous. The latest one's absence from the wedding ceremony is said to have been due to his excessive bashfulness. A man who is too modest to attend his own wedding doesn't deserve a wife, and he isn't likely to get one.—Boston Herald.

REED ON WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

The Publication of His Views Hailed With Delight by Many Women.

The publication recently of Speaker Reed's woman suffrage views has caused no end of comment, and the distinguished subject of the publication has received fervid letters of congratulation and devoted allegiance from all sections of the country. He has been greeted by a swarming delegation of enthusiastic woman suffragists at all hours during the past few days. There have been so many of them in Washington that this is not surprising. They have called at his hotel early in the morning and late at night. They have besieged the speaker's room at the capitol until the frightened speaker has had to hide himself and his secretary in the cavernous depths under the terrace. If this army of congratulation continues, it will soon grow into marching delegations with bands and banners.

While there is no reason to believe that Mr. Reed has experienced any change of faith there is reason to believe that he does not look with favor upon the publication of his views at this time. When the reporter sought some new expression of opinion from him, he promptly declined to discuss the matter any further. He did seem to resent the imputation that he had experienced any change of mind because of the time elapsed or because of any political ambition which he may have.

There has been so much commendation and so little condemnation of the views from the speaker's political friends and allies that a renewed and more affirmative expression of the same view may soon be looked for. This will make the matter a more burning campaign issue than ever, and before the campaign is over voters may expect to see large delegations of ambitious women bearing campaign banners in favor of "Tom Reed, the working girl's friend."—Washington Post.

From Good to Better.

Hungary celebrates its one thousandth anniversary this year. It has a great national history and a spirited, patriotic population, but with all its attractions 750,000 of its people have chosen to become citizens of the United States.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

A Common Error.

One of the very funniest mistakes that nine-tenths of the members of congress make, neither house being excepted, is to continually speak of a woman who has lost her husband as a "widow woman." Even Mr. Barrett used the term.—Washington Star.

A Miraculous Cross in the Sky.

A miraculous cross upon the heavens was seen by Hungus, King of Picts. It was at a time when Achaius, King of the Scots, and Hungus were routed by Athelstan, King of Northumberland. They had been defeated at every turn, and in their disordered flight had come to East Lothian. The first night in the country last mentioned was one of terrible forebodings to the fugitive kings, and during his troubled sleep Hungus dreamed (he claimed it to be a vision) that he saw the cross of Saint Andrew (the X) held out upon the sky, and that it waved back and forth "as a signal for him to press on to victory."

Early the next day the fugitives began to retrace their steps, and during the day, so tradition says, Hungus and all his army saw a verification of the previous night's vision or dream in the shape of a titanic Saint Andrew's cross clearly pictured on the heavens. All of King Hungus' soldiers, being now satisfied that the "sign" was a token of victory, were only too anxious to meet the Northumberland invaders, from whom they had ben flying in such wild disorder the day before, and if history is to be believed, they did meet Athelstan, whom they killed after they had utterly annihilated his army.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An Elixir of Life.

T. A. Slocum Offers to Send Two Bottles Free of His Remedy to Cure Consumption and all Lung Troubles.

Nothing could be fairer, more philanthropic or carry more joy in its wake than the offer of T. A. Slocum, M. C., of 183 Pearl Street, New York. Perfectly confident that he has an absolute remedy for the cure of consumption and all pulmonary complaints, he offers through this paper to send two bottles free to any reader who is suffering from lung trouble or consumption, also loss of flesh and all conditions of wasting. He invites those desirous of obtaining this remedy to send their express and post-office address, and to receive in return the two bottles free, which will arrest the approach of death. Already this remedy, by its timely use, has permanently cured thousands of cases which were given up, and death was looked upon as an early visitor.

Knowing his remedy as he does, and being so proof-positive of its beneficent results, Dr. Slocum considers it his religious duty, a duty which he owes to humanity, to donate his infallible remedy where it will assault the enemy in its citadel, and, by its inherent potency, stay the current of dissolution, bringing joy to homes over which the shadow of the grave has been gradually growing more strongly defined, causing fond hearts to grieve. The cheapness of the remedy—offered freely—apart from its inherent strength, is enough to commend it, and more so is the perfect confidence of the great chemist making the offer, who holds out life to those already becoming emaciated, and says: "Be cured."

The invitation is certainly worthy of the consideration of the afflicted, who, for years, have been taking nauseous nostrums without effect; who have ostracised themselves from home and friends to live in more salubrious climes, where the atmosphere is more congenial to weakened lungs, and who have fought against death with all the weapons and strength in their hands. There will be no mistake in sending for these free bottles—the mistake will be in passing the invitation by.

DO YOU EVER THINK?

Do you ever think as the hearse drives by
That it won't be long till you and I
Will both ride out in the big, plumed hack
And we'll never, never, never ride back?

Do you ever think as you strive for gold
That a dead man's hand can't a dollar hold?
We may tug and toil and pinch and save,
And we'll lose it all when we reach the grave.

Do you ever think as you closely clasp
Your bag of gold with a firmer grasp
If the hungry hearts of the world were fed
It might bring peace to your dying bed?

—L. A. W. Bulletin.

FOUNDED ON FACT.

"Mr. Rogers, did you say?"

"Yes, sir; a tall, middle aged gentleman," replied my servant.

I could recollect no acquaintance of the name.

"Ask him to step in here," I said at length.

The man who entered my study was a complete stranger to me. He was tall, between 40 and 50 years of age, rather thin and very angular in his movements. He wore a short beard, was slightly bald and had decidedly pleasant features. When he smiled, his eyes seemed to sparkle and he exhibited two excellent rows of teeth.

"I am afraid I am quite unknown to you," he began.

I bowed my head and wondered what was coming next.

"But your name as a rising young novelist and writer of short stories is, of course, familiar to me."

Who could he be? I began to have visions of publishers and editors clamoring at my door for contributions from my pen. Was he about to give me a commission for a new serial? Perhaps he represented some leading magazine and was prepared to pay sums undreamed of for my tales of love and adventure. Or was he only some newspaper interviewer bent on satisfying the curiosity of his readers respecting my opinions and manner of life?

"Pray be seated," I said.

We sat facing one another on opposite sides of the hearth rug. It was a cold, dull November day, and the bright fire that burned in the grate was comforting. Mr. Rogers took from his pocket a copy of a popular magazine and held it on his knee.

"Capital story that of yours!"

"Which?" I asked.

"That last one in here," he said, tapping the covers of the book, "the story called 'The Mystery of Rowner's Mill.'"

"I am glad you like it, but really"—

"A splendid story! Rather daring though."

"Daring?"

"Yes—to publish a story of real life as mere fiction."

"I don't understand what"—

"But why did you make Maud a dark girl? Of course she was fair, as you know. Her real name was Mabel, but that doesn't matter."

"You are quite"—

"Still, you have hit off Maltby to a T."

"The story, I assure, you, was"—

"Written under pressure of time? Yes, I have no doubt of it. But your description of the old mill is exact. Rowner's Mill is, of course, Radford's Mill, near B——."

"Allow me to explain"—

"Quite unnecessary, I assure you. You were perfectly justified in changing the name. But that passage in which you describe the act of vengeance on Maltby is remarkably powerful and accurate. Ah! here it is: 'Seeing his victim powerless, Jasper Gore, with the strength of a giant, seized him in his arms and for one moment held him above his head in front of the open window. Then he hurled the wretched man into space. Down, down he fell, until, with a splash that was inaudible amid the roar and rattle of the mill, Maltby disappeared in the deep water of the race, and was instantly battered to a shapeless mass by the huge revolving water wheel!'"

"But surely you know"—

"Oh, yes; I know every inch of the place. Of course you are a little bit rough on me."

"On you?"

"Yes; you see, Jasper Gore"—

I rose to my feet. So far I had hardly been able to get a word in edgeways. I had not the slightest idea what he was driving at. He was exhausting my patience.

"Look here, sir," I shouted warmly, "I haven't yet the pleasure of knowing who you are. What the—will you kindly tell me what you are talking about?"

"Why, my dear sir, I am talking about this story of yours called 'The Mystery of Rowner's Mill.' I was just saying that you have made me—other—to Jasper Gore"—

"Gore is one of my characters. I understand your name is Rogers!"

The man leaned back and roared with laughter. I sank into my chair in a state of exasperation.

"Excuse my laughing," he said, "but when you put on that innocent air it is irresistibly funny. What does it matter which name I use, Gore or Rogers—are they not one and the same? What was easier? You took my real name, Rogers, rejected the last two letters, transposed the others, and then you had it—Gore!"

I was now quite out of temper.

"I don't know what your object is," I said, "in coming here and talking this nonsense. The story is pure fiction—a simple creation of my own brain—from beginning to end. So far as I know, the characters never lived, the incidents never happened, the mill described never had any existence—except in my own imagination."

My visitor watched me as I spoke, and a grin slowly broadened on his face, until he again burst into loud laughter.

"I should never have believed it!" he said.

"Believed what?"

"You novelists, it would appear, are so steeped in fiction that you lose all regard for truth."

"What do you mean, sir?" I cried indignantly.

"Is it necessary to explain? Here, in this magazine, I have a story every essential detail of which is actual truth, and you coolly tell me that it was all evolved out of your own brain!"

"Certainly. So it was."

"Now, what is the use of talking like that to me—to me? I am Rogers—Rogers is Gore. I (call me by which name you like) am the man whose acts are described in this story."

"Do you mean to sit there and tell me that you actually committed a crime identical with that I have described?"

"Precisely. I say the story is true in every essential detail. Every action of the plot, every motive of the characters, all the descriptions of places, and even portions of the dialogue are absolutely true. I say again I am Jasper Gore!"

Imagine my feelings! Never before in the history of fiction writing had so remarkable a thing happened. Some occult power had clearly been at work on my brain and directed me to write a story founded on fact in a degree that was simply marvelous. The situation was so extraordinary that it staggered me. I was here face to face with the murderous ruffian of my own creation.

What was to be done? I glanced at the bell at his elbow.

"Never mind the bell," he said. "We shall not want to use that. Listen to me!"

He brought his chair toward me until our knees were nearly touching. With his hands on his thighs and his body bent forward he fixed his penetrating eyes on mine.

"I have told you that I am Jasper Gore. But that is only one of the names under which authors have used me in relating my exploits. You are not the only writer who has employed my deeds in fiction. You have read Blandford's novel, 'The Red Witness?' Well, I am Paul Varnham, the man who poisoned his brother and threw the body into the limekiln. You have seen the story in the last number of The Masterpiece Magazine called 'The Case of Roland Wier?' I am Roland, the man who stole the bonds and stabbed to the heart the only witness to the deed. Why, the stains of the crime are still on my hands."

I shuddered visibly, and cold sweat was on my forehead.

"Metaphorically speaking," he added with a smile, "I suppose you have read"—

"Stop!" I cried. "What is it you want of me? Why do you come to tell me all this?"

"I came to make a proposal. I am a man of many deeds—crimes, you would call them. The world is getting too hot for me. I am in danger from the sleuth hounds of the law. Shelter me; hide me, and I will give you material for some of the most thrilling stories that ever were written. I can keep you going for the rest of your life—with facts, sir, facts!

"The Rowner's Mill affair I don't know how you got hold of, but it was not obtained fairly. But I will not say anything about that. Stand by me, and I will make your fortune and your everlasting fame. Is it a bargain?"

To accept such a proposal never entered my mind for one moment. My only thought was to get this dreadful creature out of my house, whether what he said was true or not. How was I to do it?

Just then my servant knocked at the door and entered.

"Here is a gentleman wishes to see you, sir."

"Say you are engaged," said Rogers, rising from his chair and grasping me by the arm.

But the new arrival had already entered the room.

"Excuse me, sir," he said. "I have come for our good friend, Mr. Rogers. He lives with us at X——."

X—— I knew to be the place where a certain county lunatic asylum stands. I saw everything in a flash. He handed Rogers over to the care of another man in the hall, and the poor fellow went as meekly as a lamb. Then the attendant came back to me.

"I hope he has not alarmed you, sir. He escaped two days ago."

"Well, he gave me an unpleasant half hour. The man seems to be steeped in crime."

"He's all right except on that point. He fancies that he is every criminal that he reads about in the story books. We traced him to your house, and I expect he has been pitching a lively yarn about some of his doings. Ah! I thought so. But, bless your heart, sir, the poor fellow wouldn't hurt a fly."

Nevertheless, he had knocked me off my work for that day.—London Tit-Bits.

How James Otis Was Killed.

James Otis was killed by a stroke of lightning in Andover, Mass., at the old Isaac Osgood farm, May, 1783. Mr. Otis wanted a mug of cider. The hired man went into the cellar to draw the cider, leaving the cellar door open. Mr. Otis was standing in the doorway at the side of the house looking at the clouds, remarking that a heavy shower was coming up. Scarcely had the words been spoken when the bolt came down, struck Mr. Otis and killed him instantly, then passed into a large beam in the cellarway, going the length of the beam to the cellar, where it went off into the ground. The hole in the beam was large enough to thrust one's arm down, as the writer has done when visiting the Osgood farm.—Boston Transcript.

The Man and the Clothes.

There was a Methodist minister who dressed so well that a friend felt horrified and offered to give him a suit of clothes and pay for them provided he could have them made according to his ideas. The offer was accepted, and the tailor was ordered to make a suit in the plainest possible fashion. The order was filled, and the suit was tried on. The giver of it was amazed. So magnificent was the form with which nature had endowed the minister that that plain Methodist suit upon him looked as if it had just been received from Paris.—Christian Advocate.

JIM AND WENCH SOLD.

UNCLE SAM'S TEAMSTERS HATED TO SEE THE FAITHFUL PAIR GO.

And the Worst of It Was That They Were to Be Separated—For More Than Twenty Years They Had Been Together In the Service of the Government.

"At 15! At 15! Going at 15! Who says the half? Do I hear it? Only $15 for this mule? Why, gentlemen, she's worth more'n that if she never did another lick o' work. Whoa, Wench, you little old darling! Fifteen dollars I am offered! Can't I get the half? Fifteen once! Do I hear the half? No? Fifteen twice! Third and last call and sold to Mr. Carl for $15." And the auctioneer, who was also the civilian clerk in the post quartermaster's office, tenderly caressed the face, gray with age, of the little brown mule, and, brushing his hand across his own eyes, walked slowly back to his desk in the office.

Wench was led off to the blacksmith shop to be branded on the left of the neck, "I. C. S."—"inspected, condemned, sold." Twelve other mules had passed under the hammer ahead of her that morning and then to the branding iron. The last one before her was Jim, whose neck was still smoking with the burning mark of condemnation. He had gone for $15.50.

Two years ago the quartermaster had picked out Wench and Jim to submit to the inspector for condemnation, but one at a time the teamsters had all come to plead for their retention, and he had yielded to their entreaties. Last year again he had marked them for the list, but again gave way to the teamsters. But this time the chief quartermaster stepped in with his authority, and, remarking that there was no place in the quartermaster's department for sentiment, ordered Wench and Jim to be condemned and sold.

For more than a score of years these two little beasts have faithfully served the government, and all this time they have been mates. In the pack train they jogged along together; in the wagon train they pulled over the same spreader; in the camp they ate out of the same feed box; in the stable they stood in the same stall; in the corral they were always found side by side. Tonight, for the first time in this quarter century, they will be apart, for Jim was bought by Mr. Hammond, and Wench was knocked down to Mr. Carl, and Uncle Sam's exchequer is richer by $30.50.

No place for sentiment in the quartermaster's department! Of course not, yet "breathes there the man with soul so dead" that he does not believe these two little dumb creatures will miss each other this night and many a night?

As the sale went on the teamsters stood on one side like mourners at a comrade's burial; on the other, the farmers and ranchmen and contractors and lumbermen from 20 miles around, all there to bid in as cheap as possible the mules the quartermaster's department was done with. Against the name of each mule on the list stood the legend, "Old and worn out in service."

There were old Rooney and Bevis and Boss and Schaeffer and the rest of the teamsters who have driven and packed these mules over thousands of miles of mountain and prairie. Are they to be laughed at for wearing sad faces now? Yet they bore the ordeal like men good and true until Jim was led out. Then you could see their sleeves, one after another, drawn across their eyes.

"This here's awful, boys," old Rooney remarked. "I can't stand it. I'd rather see the gover'ment bust than see them two mules sold."

"You're right, Rooney," old Bevis spoke. "A gover'ment mean enough to sell them two mules ain't fit to stand." But their comments were stopped by the auctioneer's third and last call on poor little Jim.

After the sale was over a farmer, wearing a canvas overcoat that he had bought at a previous sale of condemned stuff and that bore in the middle of the back the big black letters, "I. C.," stepped up to the teamsters and asked why they hated so much to see the last two mules sold.

"Why?" asked old Schaeffer, half angry, tossing the moisture off his wrinkled cheek. "Because they're the best friends we ever had. Them two mules was back with the pack train the day Custer and his men was wiped out. They toted packs during all the 1876 and 1877 campaigns 'gin the Indians. They're the best pair of leaders that was ever in this corral. They can drive the'selves, and in their young days, whenever there was a fight or skeery place to go through or a hard pull to make, they was the first ones called for. They he'ped haul the Seventh from here to Riley, and the Eighth from there up here. There's never been a campaign or a march from this post that them mules ain't gone on it. And they've never been separated till today, an durned if I b'lieve they'll work a lick by the'selves. Do you, Bevis?"

"I sho' hope they won't," this old fellow answered bitterly. And they walked away to the teamsters' mess.—New York Herald.

An Adventure In the Sahara.

Tartarin narrated his latest exploits in the desert: "* * * I was sinking deeper and deeper into the sand, and I owe my preservation solely to the fact of my being prematurely and completely bald."

"You are jesting."

"Not at all. The sun was shining fiercely, a strong wind was blowing at the time; the sand drifted about my feet and rose gradually higher until it reached my chest—in short, there was soon nothing to be seen of me above the sand but a light elevation as round as an egg; that was my skull. An ostrich, happening to pass that way, closely pursued by the hunters, came and squatted on my head. It was beginning to hatch me when its pursuers came to my rescue."—Fanfare.

THE SEWING MACHINE.

Many Wonders Accomplished by This Useful Instrument.

Anything that may be penetrated by a needle is food for the sewing machine. It makes loop and chain stitches through cloth of any kind and thickness, heavy duck, wood veneers, leather, heavy carpets, rubber, and anything that a needle can go through.

The button-sewing machine will sew on any kind of a button—four hole, two-hole or "bar," and it will place them securely on the garment at the rate of 3,000 to 5,000 a day.

It will sew on a tiny shirt button or one of those butter-saucer buttons, two and a half inches in diameter, which women put on their jackets to-day, and it does not add a cent to the cost of making the garment.

The demand came for a machine which would give a larger daily output. The machines were sewing 2,000 and 2,400 stitches a minute, but that was not fast enough to suit the men who used them. A machine was invented which sews 3,500 stitches a minute, and does it every minute it works. It is used on many fabrics, for sewing underwear and clothing and such work.

Between the double-needle and the 12-needle machines are those which sew four, six or more, up to twelve, parallel seams at a time. They are used to sew parallel seams on harrims, for sewing together the stripes of flags, for running up the sides of overalls and trousers, and a hundred other things.

For a long time manufacturers were satisfied with the plain, flat bed of the ordinary machine, with such attachments and additions as they required for special work. But some fellow who wanted something done that apparently was impossible made his cry for a tubular, or cylindrical, shaped bed, so that he could stitch around a hollow article, such as a collar box or a shoe vamp.

He got his machine, and then came the demand for one which would sew hollow things lengthwise instead of around. Now there are no less than six different styles of machines for sewing up legs of trousers, high-topped boots, seams of shirts, for sewing the cylindrical part of collar boxes, for backstaying shoes and for many other purposes, and new uses are found for them every day.

Clothing makers shouted for a machine to make buttonholes, and here is one that will cut and make 2,500 to 5,000 buttonholes a day. The first machines did good work in a way, but they did not make buttonholes that could not be told from the hand made. No one but an expert can tell the difference between those made by the machine now used and those made by hand.

The largest sewing machine in the world is eighteen feet long. It is used in the manufacture of very wide belts and has one needle. It is supplied with corrugated feed rolls which not only feeds the material to the needle but compress the canvas layers together.

One of the oddest uses to which a sewing machine was ever put was for sewing canvas on wood veneers, used for building light, portable houses. The veneer is three-ply, and to increase its strength without adding weight it is backed with canvas and this canvas is sewed on.

Then the wood and canvas are soaked in mineral paint and dried, and thus made impervious to water and moisture proof. There are over 300 different kinds of sewing machines made and used in this country.

Butler and Cameron.

Ex-Senator Butler, of South Carolina, has dropped into a handsome practice here since his retirement from the Senate. In spite of the radical difference in their political opinions, the friendship between Butler and Don Cameron has always been strong. It would be difficult to find two men more diametrically opposite in habits, tastes, and ways than these two representative men of the North and South. Butler, born and bred in the home of the duello, punctiliousness, and the most delicate sense of personal dignity and honor, hospitable, brave, and courtly; Cameron, brought up on strictly Pennsylvania lines and standards, inheriting, so to speak, a seat in the Senate, quiet, grave, determined, undemonstrative, without the graces of manner of Butler, but clear-headed, well informed with a taste for the elegances and refinements of life, combined with plenty of Scotch thrift.—Washington Post.

"He is a bright writer, then?" "Bright! Why, man, he writes such bright things that the people of the paper he works on sometimes glance over them."—Boston Courier.

Mrs. De Stolle—Did you enjoy the opera? Mrs. Fushion—Very much. We had a box, and the B'Jonses sat right opposite us in the circle. It was glorious!—Philadelphia North American.

ONLY EARTHWORMS.

YET THEY HAVE CUT QUITE A FIGURE IN THE WORLD'S HISTORY.

The Worm Has No Eyes and No Sense of Hearing, but Is Sensitive to Strong Light and Vibrations of Sound—Objects of Antiquity Preserved by Earthworms.

The common earthworm, despised by man and heedlessly trodden underfoot, fulfills a part in nature that would seem incredible but for the facts revealed by the patient and long continued researches of Darwin. "Worms," says Darwin, "have played a more important part in the history of the world than most persons would at first suppose." Let us follow Darwin and see how this apparently insignificant creature has changed the face of nature. We will first consider the habits and mode of life of the earthworm. As every one knows, the worms live in burrows in the superficial layer of the ground. They can live anywhere in a layer of earth, provided it retains moisture, dry air being fatal to them. They can, on the other hand, exist submerged in water for several months. They live chiefly in the superficial mold less than a foot below the surface, but in long continued dry weather and in very cold seasons they may burrow to a depth of eight feet. The burrows are lined by a thin layer of earth, voided by the worms, and end in small chambers in which they can turn round.

The burrows are formed partly by pushing away the earth, but chiefly by the earth being swallowed. Large quantities of earth are swallowed by the worms for the sake of the decomposing vegetable matter contained in it, on which they feed. The earth thus swallowed is voided in spiral heaps, forming the worm castings. In this case the worm obtains food and at the same time excavates its burrows.

In addition to the food thus obtained half decayed leaves are dragged into the burrows, mainly for food, but also to plug the mouths of the burrows for the sake of protection. Worms are also fond of meat, especially fat. They will also eat the dead bodies of their relatives. They are nocturnal in habit, remaining, as a rule, in the burrows during the day and coming out to feed at night.

The earthworm has no eyes, but is affected by strong light if exposed to it for some time. It has no sense of hearing, but is sensitive to the vibrations of sound. The whole body is sensitive to touch. There appears to be some sense of smell, but this is limited to a certain articles of food, which are discovered by the worm when buried in earth, in preference to other bodies not relished. The worm appears to have some degree of intelligence from the way in which it draws the leaves into its burrows, always judging which is the best end to draw them in by. This is remarkable in so lowly organized an animal, being a degree of intelligence not possessed by many animals of more complex organization. For instance, the ant can often be seen dragging objects along traversely instead of taking them the easiest way.

As we have seen, vast quantities of earth are continually being passed through the bodies of worms and voided on the surface as castings. When it is stated that the number of worms in an acre of ordinary land suitable for them to live in is 53,000, we can imagine the great effect which they must have on the soil.

They are, in fact, continually plowing the land. At one part of the alimentary canal of the worm is a gizzard, or hard muscular organ, capable of grinding food into fine particles. It is this gizzard which is the main factor in triturating the soil, and it is aided by small stones swallowed with the earth, which act as millstones.

In consequence of the immense amount of earth continually being brought to the surface by worms it is not difficult to understand how objects, such as stones, rocks, etc., lying on the surface will in course of time become gradually buried in the ground. Owing to the burial of stones and other objects by the action of worms, ancient monuments, portions of Roman villas and other objects of antiquity have been preserved. These have been gradually buried by the worms and so preserved from the destructive effect of rain and wind. Many Roman remains were studied by Darwin, and traces of the action of worms found, to which action their preservation was mainly due. The sinking of the foundations of old buildings is due to the action of worms, and no building is safe from this unless the foundations are laid lower than the level at which the worms can work—namely, about eight feet below the surface.

Another useful effect produced by worms is the preparation of the soil for the growth of seedlings. By their agency the soil is periodically sifted and exposed to the air, and in this way is able to retain moisture and absorb soluble substances of use for the nutrition of plants.—Knowledge.

He Put It Frankly.

"I've got a quarter here," said the red nosed wanderer, "and I calculate to git me dinner wit it."

"What's that to me?" asked the citizen whom he had stopped on the street.

"Jist this. I'm goin to git a regular meal—table dote, see—and I thought that may be if you would lend me a dime to git a drink I could git a good enough appetite to eat my money's worth."—Indianapolis Journal.

"Well, that was right."

"But, mamma, he hollered ten times as loud as he whispered."—Chicago Record.

The coming of a national convention to a city means the expenditure there in one way or another of $2,000,000 or $3,000,000 for the benefit of local merchants.

FREAK FRUIT TREE.

Bears Different Kinds of Apples and May Produce Grapes.

James Mullineaux, residing near Gallipolis, Ky., has an apple tree that was bought for a golden russet, and the first year it bore beautiful russets. The next year it bore sheep nose apples. The next year it bore an early sweet crop. This year it was laden with a beautiful large red winter apple that no one knows the name of.

Mr. Mullineaux is confident that next year he will have a crop of grapes from it, or maybe peaches. What causes this wonderful freak of nature is unexplainable. Mr. Mullineaux might think the different varieties of apples came from different grafts were it not that they appear all over the tree.—New York Recorder.

"No Man's Land" the Place.

It is now pretty well settled that the pugilistic contests will be pulled off immediately north of El Paso or near No Man's Land, which is said to be in dispute between Texas and New Mexico. Bill Bradburn of Chicago will be a special referee for Dan Stuart at all the fights. He is to assist the official referee in matters under the control of the latter, but which are hard to watch by any one man—such, for instance, as watching seconds, timekeepers and friends of contestants, and keeping them from transgressing any rules while the ring referee is busy elsewhere.—New York Sun.

Dug Up a British Man-of-war.

Workmen excavating in the imperial navy yard at Halifax have found what proved to be the remains of an old fashioned British man-of-war. The timbers are about four inches thick, of oak and in a good state of preservation, notwithstanding the fact that they have been imbedded for probably a century. How the hull got there is a mystery

THE GIANTS OF OLD.

PREVIOUS AGES SUPPLY US WITH ENORMOUS FOSSIL BONES.

Lizards Three Times the Size of the Largest Elephant and a Turtle Whose Shell Looked Like a Hut—Marine Giants and the Remarkable Plated Lizard.

The belief in a race of giants was once almost universal and held until recent years. Even today large skeletons when found are sometimes reported as being those of giant human beings. This was especially true of the period about the tenth and eleventh centuries, and in the latter a most amazing discovery was reported, which threw the scientific world of the time into great excitement. It was said that the body of Pallas, the son of Evander, had been discovered beneath the tomb of the emperor Henry III. The bones were enormous, and it is unnecessary to state, proved to have belonged to a huge fossil elephant. As late as the fifteenth century a war of words was waged over a find of large bones, one party claiming that they belonged to the giant Teutobochus. In 1857 a giant was discovered in Switzerland. The council of Lucerne requested a learned scientific man, Professor Felix Plater of Basel, to report upon it, and he not only announced the bones as part of a human giant, but made a complete restoration, showing the man 20 feet high, which the proud city adopted as an ancestor in the arms of the commonwealth. The design and some of the bones can still be seen in the college of Jesuits at Lucerne. Unfortunately for the theory and much to the discomfiture of the people who had raised to a high pinnacle this mighty ancestor, it was found to be the remains of an elephant.

Nearly all the mastodon finds in this country were attributed to giants, but there is no evidence that a human giant ever existed over 8 feet in height, and it is extremely doubtful if this height was ever attained.

Giants other than human are very common in all branches of the animal kingdom—giants in every sense when compared to their pygmy representatives of today. Some years ago some laborers in the Senalik hills of India were engaged upon a government work when they came upon the remains of a turtle that proved beyond question that these animals had their giants in the days of old. The shell which the men exposed might have been used as a shelter for several men, and at first, before its bony nature was observed, it was thought by the natives to be a hut of some kind. Fortunately the bones were uninjured, and they were taken out and removed to the British museum, where a complete restoration of the animal may be seen. The length of the turtle was 10 feet, its horizontal circumference 25 feet, and its girth 15 feet, but it was estimated by scientists that this was not an adult, and that when fully grown this huge creature would display a domelike back 8 or 9 feet high, giving a total length of 20 feet.

One of the common animals in equatorial South America and in Central America is the lizard, iguana, which attains a length of 4 or 5 feet and is considered a large lizard, but it was a pygmy when compared to an ancestor that once wandered over England and various portions of the world. A number of years ago some workingmen were excavating and blasting in a quarry near Maidstone, England, when some bones were uncovered that caused profound astonishment on the part of the finders. The skeleton was perfect, and as it was lifted out, bone by bone, the [illegible] ment increased, and the ne[illegible] all over the country, [illegible] numbers of people. W[illegible] were placed in their proper p[illegible] they were found to be the skeleton [illegible] gigantic lizard that when alive must have been three times as bulky as the largest living elephant and stood upon its hind legs like a kangaroo, tearing down branches from the highest trees. Such an animal was a slow mover and sluggish and must have fallen an easy prey to the human hunters, if they existed.

The marine giants were even more bizarre and remarkable than the land forms. If we can imagine the little iguana lengthened out to 30 feet, its back spines changed to broad finlike objects, we form some idea of the appearance of one of the small dinosaurs, Stegosaurus ungulatus, one of the most uncanny and remarkable creatures ever found. It is called the plated lizard, and the best skeleton was found on the eastern flank of the Rocky Mountains. Some of the plates with which this armored lizard were protected were two or three feet in diameter and the spines over two feet in length. From the fact that the hind limbs were the largest, it is evident that this strange creature could lift itself up and sit like a kangaroo, resting upon its powerful tail, which, with its enormous spines, must have been a terrible weapon.

A giant from America had a skull that measured eight feet in length. Almost over the eyes were two large horns, a third placed over the nose. The great length of the skull was given by a huge crest that was protected by a ridge of long plates. The mouth of the triceratops was protected by a horny beak. In life it must have presented a formidable appearance, with a body clumsy and low like that of a hippopotamus, a long tail like an alligator's, its head calling to mind the rhinoceros. This monster was 25 feet in length and must have been one of the strangest animals of its time.—Philadelphia Press.

Sitting Up Late.

There is nothing so tends to shorten the lives of old people and to injure their health as the practice of sitting up late, particularly in the winter evenings. This is especially the case when there is a grown up daughter in the family. We publish this item at the earnest request of several young men.—London Tit-Bits.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

REV. H. MULHOLLAND, EDITOR.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.

FRIDAY, MAY 29 ..... 1896

Since the time when men first cnogregated into communities and began to exchange with each other the products of their industry, there has been complaint, more or less general, that continuous and profitable employment could not be found for all; and it is not improbable that poverty and destitution among the masses have been comparatively as great in every age of the civilized world as are endured to-day. A part of this poverty has been and is still due to indolence, thriftlessness and infirmity, but whatever else may have conspired to produce it in the past, certain it is that a hurtful and unbalanced distribution of labor, and consequent overproduction in favorite lines of business enterprise, are largely responsible for it now. Especially may this be said of our own country. A remedy for this industrial condition cannot be suggested without intrenching upon the domain of party politics. Let it simply be recognized, then, that the condition exists, and that a majority of those who suffer by it are disposed to attribute a seeming oversupply of labor to improved and constantly methods of production through machinery operating with the skill and precision of the craftsman and tirelessly performing the service of millions of human hands. To this the intelligent laborer no longer makes protest. He knows that the transportation facilities of two generations ago would be utterly inadequate of meeting the commercial necessities of to-day, and that without the aid of machinery the existing wants of mankind could not be practically supplied. He sees that street cars are extending the boundaries of cities, that elevators are lifting habitable structures far into the unassessed air, and that arms and shoulders of steel, energized and directed by steam and electricity, are everywhere bearing the heavy burdens of the civilized world. He cannot deny that machinery has cheapened and is daily cheapening the price of every commodity consumed by him; yet he is unable to divest himself of the impression that it is in some manner responsible for the poverty and meager fare to which no civilized community has ever yet been stranger. He who so believes is greatly in error. Machinery has cheapened everything except labor, and there has perhaps never been a time when there has been less poverty on earth, in proportion to the number of its people, or less pinching want that there is now. Trace back the history of civilization century by century for a thousand years, and in no five consecutive decades can be found the records, porportionately, so small a sum of human misery through inadequate sustenance and shelter as can be shown of the past fifty years. This assertion would be nearer correct, perhaps, by substituting human need for human misery, since the degree of need which causes humiliation and suffering to-day would have been born with stoicism a hundred years ago. Man's wants are constantly increasing, and keep pace with his tastes and appetites, his real needs are much more easily measured; yet what the average workman now regards as the necessities of life would have been received as luxuries more than a century later when Shakespeare lived, and the toiler of 1896 would mutiny at the fare upon which his great-grandfather thrived and gratefully craved the blessings of heaven. To the laboring masses "the good old days" of song and story never existed. Their food supplies were course, scant and uncertain, and their contentment was due to the knowledge that titled classes fared but little [illegible] little more than sixty years [illegible] of the laboring classes [illegible] for special Parliamentary [illegible] relief, and for a period of fifty years, beginning in 1790 and ending in 1840, the producing orders in almost every part of Europe were subjected to protracted seasons of unendurable hardship. Thousands died of starvation in Germany. In Norway, Sweeden and The Netherlands the barks of trees were eaten, and everything clean and unclean was devoured. In France the peasantry of many departments subsisted for a time on the herbage of the fields, and hundreds of them died of surfeit when they were at length supplied with barley bread. In the fifteenth, sixteenth, seventeenth and eighteenth centuries the common food of the poor of all countries was rye or barley bread, with coarse vegetables, skimmed and sour milk, and occasional morsels of meat. Unlimited wheaten bread and meat were luxuries enjoyed alone by the rich. The American tramp of to-day will grumble at such a gratuity. It was not machinery that deprived the laborer of employment in the past; not machinery that rated his services at a price but a shade beyond the cost of his frugal fare; not machinery that kept him in ignorance and comparative slavery; nor is it machinery now that withholds from him the means of making an honest living with his hands. Machinery is never invented in advance of the demand for it—never invented until a market is seen for more of its products than unaided hands are able to supply; and while it may give a temporary check to employment in the line of its operation, it opens new fields of industry, and in the end increases the general demand for labor. A part of this demand is invoved in the manufacture of the machinery, the expense of operating and keeping it in repair, and in the production of the materials used in its construction. That machinery tends to augment rather than deminish the demand for labor is conclusively shown by the census returns from 1860 to 1890. In 1860 26.18 per cent of the whole population of the United States were engaged in profitable occupations. In 1870 this percentage had increased to 32.43, in 1880 to 34.63 and in 1890 to 36.31. If all under 10 years of age are ommitted in the calculation, the percentage is shown to be 36.72 in 1860 and 47.95 in 1890, an increase of 11 per cent in thirty years—a period during which more labor-saving machinery was put into operation than in the seventy years preceding. The only machinery competing with labor is political, and the motive power is wind.

THE GOLDEN HAND.

LEGEND OF HIDDEN TREASURE IN CENTRAL AMERICA.

Two Venturesome Men Hear the Story From an Old Indian, and With Him as Guide They Seek Out the Place—Only Two of the Party Return.

"You're counting too much on the word of an Indian. Old Zapetl is a noted liar—like all these Spanish speaking aborigines."

"Ah, Jack, you do him injustice. He's a deeper liar than you give him credit for. It's ridiculous to believe that the ancients had enough mechanical knowledge to contrive a machine that could prevent one from getting at the gold."

This last speech was from my old comrade, Tom French. We were in the interior of Central America when the foregoing conversation took place. It was the end of many a long debate we had had on the subject of a search for a treasure.

The legend was briefly that deep in the center of a crater of a worn out volcano the ancient Indians of that country had excavated a vault where they had piled up countless bars of virgin gold. There was above this planted a bowlder, the only indication of the hiding place. The peculiarity of the crater was that it was four square, half a mile each way, and from the summit to the floor, a distance of 500 feet. To reach the floor there was a hidden path and this was guarded by a mysterious golden hand. Tradition, the Indians said, made it possible to locate the mountain in only one way. That was by climbing the peaks in the barren region far above us to the southeastward until one should be found from whose lofty crests there were three other peaks forming a straight line. In the central mountain was the treasure.

Few burdens could be carried with us in that high, rare atmosphere, and we were soon on our way with old Zapetl shaking his head, as if in prediction of disaster. Hardened as we were by our out of door life, the strain was terrible. We lost our way repeatedly and found ourselves confronted by vast crevices in our pathway up the mountain side. Wide detours, costing us half a day and sometimes a day of valuable time, were perforce made, only to find ourselves at the top of a precipice that barred our progress. We had with infinite trouble climbed two lofty mountains, only to find ourselves at the summit out of range of other mountain towns, as demanded by the legend, when I finally refused to go farther. It was suicidal. Half our provisions and water were gone. But Tom pleaded for one more chance. "Do you see that long range?" he cried. "It's in one of those. Let's make one more attempt." In mistaken pity for him I yielded.

As we reached the summit, behold! there were three mountain peaks in a row. Tom sprang forward and after another struggle we were at the top of the central mountain. As we approached the top it could be seen that there had been volcanic action in ages past. Zapetl's eyes were rolling in every direction, on the lookout for some supernatural phenomenon. Suddenly bursting through, dense fringe of bushes we found ourselves on the very edge of a vast crater. As with common impulse we looked to the center, and there was an immense bowlder. "At last," cried Tom, "at last!" Then he ran his eye along the verge, scanning it foot by foot. "The path," he almost screamed, and he stumbled along at a pace that, exhausted as we were, we could scarcely maintain. "Take care, Tom," I managed to ejaculate, though I was nearly as wild as he. But Tom apparently heard nothing. He had eyes and ears only for the one goal.

The path along the side of the precipice, we could see, led upward from the wide floor of the arena far below us, but the top was concealed from our intent gaze by a dense mass of shrubbery. Around the sides of the crater we half stumbled, half ran. When we reached the spot where we thought it possible to strike upon the opening, we made dashes here and there into the greenery. After many disappointments a cry from Tom told me the path had been found. Zapetl by this time was in a state of collapse through fear and fatigue. Again I warned Tom to exercise caution, but he plunged ahead, and I followed as slowly as I could. The path downward was not more than a foot in width, and it required all my strength and dexterity to keep my footing. Suddenly on rounding a sharp angle in the face of the precipice I was confronted by a flat rock five minutes' climb further down. It seemed to be set in the face of the crater and to jut out, cutting off further progress in that direction. The rock was of a peculiar reddish yellow color, and, on looking more intently, it seemed to take upon itself the shape of a monstrous hand. It flashed over me all at once—this was the golden hand of the Indian's legend. I called to Tom, but he was far below me. "Tom, the rock!" I cried hoarsely, and my own voice sounded strangely in my ears. But Tom had already reached it. Suddenly a scream of anguish I shall never forget rose in that awful stillness, and in another instant I saw that ponderous hand of golden stone sink lower, still lower. Another scream wilder than before and Tom's form could be seen striving vainly to clutch with his hands the smooth surface as it sank downward with increasing rapidity. I shut my eyes and listened. The sight was too awful to bear. When I opened them, the rock that had turned on a pivot with poor Tom's weight was upright and was moving back to its original place. Of that frightful fall into the crater I never dared to think. Old Zapetl and I had weary days of toil in our return to the plantation, and my life was nearly forfeited by a fever in which I could hear Tom's last despairing shriek and see him sliding to his awful death.—Brooklyn Eagle.

AND A PROFESSOR ALSO.

"Now, look here," said the professor to the infuriated bull, "you are my superior in strength. I am your superior in mind. Let us arbitrate this matter and see which should by right have the better of our controversy."

"Oh, no," replied the bull. "Let's toss up for it."

Later.—The professor lost.—London Tit-Bits.

There is an herb growing on Mount Libanus and in the surrounding country which is said to stain a bright yellow the teeth of all animals that feed upon it.

THE GOOD TIME COMING.

With the New Woman on the Platform It Will Be Time to Look Out.

"Dey tells me," said Aunt Dinah pausing in the dining room door and resting her hands on her hips, "dey tells me dat de wimmin is ad a meetin goin on whar dey jiss spechifys same as de men. Is dat so?"

Her mistress laid down the paper in which she was reading the reports of some of the brilliant papers delivered before the Association For the Advancement of Women, and tried to explain matters to her.

"Dey des got up on de platform, did dey?" asked the old woman, "an speak right out in meetin?"

She was assured they did.

"An dey kin talk back?"

She was informed that was their privilege.

"Bless Gord I done live to see dis day!" she replied fervently. "I lay I'll des git Brer Jones at de meetin dis very night. De odder night I felt called on to 'zort sinners, an he say: 'Set down, Sis Dinah, de wimmin must keep silence in de chu'ch. Dey's de weaker vessel.' I was hot, an I 'spon': 'Ef dey wa'nt no wimmin in de chu'ches, Brer Jones, whar would de chue'h be? Who pays de preacher? Whar you get dat fine coat on yo' back? Ain't it de Daughters of Zion done raise de money? Don't seem lik I hear nobody complainin 'bout wimmin in de chue'h when it comes to passin roun de hat.'

"You say de time comin when de wimmin gwine run de town? Dey'll clean up things then, sho'. I bein de mayor himself can't sweep like me, let 'lone depupity piece'men. Des give me a broom an I kin clean mo' street in a hour dan de committee does in a year.

"An wimmin gwine to vote too? Good marster, how the worl do change! Fus' de niggers an den de wimmin. Rec'on folks think some dem wimmin what's been goin to school an colleges is got most much sense as niggers now.

"What's dat you say? Wimmin gwine purify politics an ain't gwine sell their votes? Sho'! What's de good of votin if dey ain't no two-bitsin it? Dis ole nigger's been plannin to lay off work an vote fer all it's worth."—New Orleans Picayune.

In the Course of Events.

"Say, Chimmy," he said thoughtfully as he gazed at the golf players, "dere's no tellin what dese swells'll do."

"W'at's de matter wit' 'em now?"

"Look at 'em an see. Dey're playin shinny. Dey'll be shootin marbles an flyin kites next."—Washington Star.

A LONG BURROW.

Tunnel of Nearly Two Miles Excavated by an Industrious Mole.

Down along the river bank after the water had receded into a narrow channel, through which it tumbled and eddied and belched up great rings, there was left a broad sand flat. This sand flat fell off in broad steps, in which here and there were left shallow pools. Big, gnarly stumps of trees, probably grown many miles up the river, had occasionally stranded, after floating down on the river's surface, and gathered piles of driftwood about them. Barrels and boxes of all sorts of strange plunder were to be found, and it is not altogether unlikely that one, by looking closely, might have found more than one article of value.

The sand had dried down as hard and firm as on any Atlantic beach. It was springy, too, just the thing for brisk walking. And walking on it was a joy. There were neither jostling elbows nor sweet smells nor sounds, just the gray sky above, the damp wind and the yellow river oozing along a stone's throw away.

Traversing this flat was a remarkable little ridge or welt. It started in the sand where the last river bank had begun just before the river receded. Above it the grasses hung over the five foot bank, and towering aloft was a large cottonwood tree. The welt ran straight out toward the river 1,000 yards or more, then turned west and wound in a waving line up stream. For nearly two miles it could be followed, weaving here and there, never disappearing below the surface and never changing in appearance, until it suddenly lost itself in another bank of sand against which it had run. It was the burrow of a mole. And who knows but the little blind burrower is still working his way through half of Clay county to find the end of the bank. Or maybe he started upward after awhile and came out in the middle of some farmer's frozen garden patch or cornfield.—Kansas City Star.

He Was Sold.

Lord Brassey, the governor general of Victoria, was recently riding in one of the Melbourne parks, and having lost his way he made inquiries of a stalwart Irish policeman. The Melbourne police are free and easy in their manners, and the officer replied by laying his hand on the governor's shoulder and pointing to a distant gate. "Yes, old man," he said, "that's the way out, and be d——d sharp out of it or you'll be getting yourself into trouble."

Passengers on west-bound overland trains of Central Pacific Railroad are respectfully notified that during the excursion season, commencing May 1st and closing October 1st, a delightful trip to LAKE TAHOE can be enjoyed (losing but one day in their journey) by taking the Express train of the Virginia & Truckee Railroad, leaving Reno at 7:10 a m, arriving at Carson City at 8:25 a m, where well-equipped stages leave promptly for Glenbrook, Lake Tahoe, connecting with Lake Tahoe steamer for Tahoe City, there connecting with Moody & Co.'s stages for Truckee, arriving same evening where connection is made with west-bound passenger train of Central Pacific Railroad. Through tickets, Reno to Truckee, by above route, for sale at Ticket Office, Reno, $6 00. East-bound passengers can leave Truckee early in the morning (Through Tickets for sale at Stage Office in Truckee) make the trip over the above described route, arriving at Reno same evening.

VIRGINIA CITY & THE COMSTOCK

Passengers may also take train mentioned at Reno for Virginia City, 52 miles, where an entire day may be pleasantly and profitably spent examining the famous Comstock Mines (now being worked to a perpendicular depth of 3,100 feet) with their massive hoisting and pumping machinery. Returning, see Time-Table above Round Trip Tickets for sale at Ticket Office Reno. aug8-tf

DIED.

Scott—At Bishop, May 26, 1896, Mabel, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. B. F. Scott.

New potatoes have made their appearance.

All the schools of the county have closed.

P. A. Chalfant came down from Bishop yesterday.

W. L. Hunter went to Bishop the first of the week.

Dave Holland came up from Keeler yesterday morning.

A. Stecker came in from Snow's canyon yesterday morning.

Fresh cherries and strawberries at Rhine's this evening.

Supt. Laws of the C. & C. passed down the road last Wednesday.

J. C. Miller has erected a porch in front of the Palace saloon.

J. R. Moffett will take a trip to Los Angeles within a few weeks.

Social Dance at Mair's hall this evening. Supper at Norman House.

E. A. Reddy came in from Darwin last Saturday and returned Sunday.

An entertainment is talked of here for the evening of the Fourth of July.

E. Robinson will send his band of cattle to Monache within a few days.

Chas. Anthony came in from Darwin last Saturday and returned Sunday.

Bertrand Rhine went to Bishop yesterday morning, returning to-day.

The school election in this district will be held at the school house next Friday.

J. A. McKenzie came in from Darwin last Saturday and returned the next day.

Nevada's state fair this year will be held from September 21st to 26th inclusive.

Malone & Fuller came down from Fish Springs yesterday. They made a small run and brought in twelve ounces of bullion.

We saw Charley Thurston in Reno last Sunday. He is an actor in the Shaw Company and says he is doing very nicely.

From Aberdeen.

School closed one week earlier than expected to the great disappointment of all concerned. Plans were not completed for final examinations nor closing exercises, and at first it was tho't all must be given up. But with a "never say fail spent"—the teacher, Miss Doss, rallied her forces, and the result was that on last Friday night, May 22, the public was invited to the first exhibition in the Taboose district. Owing to the short time spent in preparation, a few hitches in the programme were inevitable, but they were readily overlooked by the good natured audiance. Too much prase can n t be accorded Miss Doss, for the very excellent work done the past year with her little handful of pupils—under circumstances that were anything but conducive to advancement. Following is the programme as rendered on the last day:

The Woodman.....Song by the School.
"If," recitation ..... Harry Neil
A Commonplace Boy...Lester Callaway.
Whip-poor-will song.....Katie Walter.
"A Little Bird Tells".....Johnnie Stuart.
The Courtship of Larry O'Dell.....
Will Callaway.
"The Jolliest Boy Alive".....
Song by the Boys.
The Painter's Offer .....May Hines.
"Fine Old Irish Gentleman," song .....
Will Calvert.
Charades
Jones and Brown...Song by the School.
Widow Spriggin's Daughter.....
Katie Walter.
Mrs. Flannigan's Pig.....Will Callvert.
Dawn of Day .....Song by School.
Tea at Five; a farce.
"Goodnight Ladies".....Song by School.

Gold From the Argus Range.

William Smith of La Panza returned on Saturday from a prospecting trip on the desert. He visited Geiler, Red Rock, Randsburg and the other camps, and went as far as the Argus range, a point just over the line in Inyo county. There he and his partner struck a vein of quartz from which they mortered out over $100 in ten days. Mr. Smith brought some of the gold to the Californian office and it is certainly very fine. He has gone home to attend to his hay crop and as soon as it is out of the way will go back and develop his mine. He says there are lots of good mines out on the desert, but the trouble is men have taken up a dozen or fifteen claims apiece and a stranger has no show.—Bakersfield Californian.

A Hint For Fishermen.

A New York daily paper contains the following: Dutch fishermen make astonishing catches by means of the following very simple plan: They put a number of live worms and insects in a bottle partially filled with water and then cork it securely. The bottle is dropped into the water, the fisherman sinking his line alongside. It appears that the sight of the wriggling contents of the bottle so excites the appetite of the finny tribes that they fall easy victims to the bated hooks. So true is it that the simplest methods are the best.

Railroad Changes.

George Mills has resigned his position as Auditor and Paymaster of the V. & T. and Hume Yerington has also resigned as supply agent at Carson. It is stated that the Virginia City office will be closed and that Ed. Yerington will act Secretary, Auditor and Paymaster, with headquarters at Carson. The changes will take effect June 1st.—Bulletin.

Stray Notice.

The following described horses are running on my ranch:

5 sorrels with reach tails.
2 bays.
1 brown with halter.
1 blue grey.

The owner will please call and pay damages and take them away.

JACOB HODGE.
May 25, 1896. Alabama Ranch.

To Whom It May Concern.

Notice is hereby given that from and after this date I will not be responsible for any bills run, or debts contracted, by my sons, Ned and Frank McGann.

PETER MCGANN.
Dated May 20, 1896.

Lost.

A gold enameled badge, shield shaped. Finder please leave at store of E. Chenot

A great deal of attention is now being directed toward Inyo County in mining circles. There are now in the county four mining experts, representing as many different interests. The outlook for the future never looked brighter than now.

Constable Smith of Bishop brought down an insane person yesterday for examination. The poor creature is said to be quite violent and restraining measures are absolutely necessary. She is a middle aged woman named Mrs. Jenkins.

Lone Pine is in a state of ferment over the water question. There is a great deal of acrimonious feeling in the matter and on Tuesday it looked as though there might be serious trouble, but it was happily averted.

W. G. Luckhardt, a mining expert arrived from San Francisco last Monday evening and is making an examination of the Victor Trepier mines at Beveridge on behalf of the legatees.

Bodie will have a "large" time on the Fourth of July. A new track has been built and nicely equipped and there will be several days racing. Quite a number will go from here.

Washoe County has won it's tax suit against the V. T. R. R. A judgment for the full amount sued for was rendered and the Assessor's valuation of $9,500 a mile was approved.

E. E. Chenot arrived at Independence last Monday evening from San Francisco and is visiting with his uncle, E. Chenot. He was here for a short time about eight years ago.

A. L. Conklin and Julian Eibeshutz left for Monache last Monday. Earnest Laird occupies Julian's position during his absence.

Will Beach, the owner of the Harry Robinson ranch at Georges Creek, arrived from Los Angeles early in the week. He will return in a few days.

Central Committee Meeting

A meeting of the Inyo County Democratic Central Committee was held at Independence on Saturday, May 23, 1896. W. L. Hunter was chosen chairman pro tem. A. W. Eibeshutz, secretary pro tem. E. Robinson was appointed to the vacancy caused by the removal of Henry Rhine. E. Robinson elected permanent chairman. J. A. McKenzie and A. W. Eibeshutz were appointed delegates to the State Convention, to be held at Sacramento, on September 16, 1896.

An Eastern lawyer was given to swearing. One night his small boy was sitting by him, studying arithmetic. The father broke out, "What on earth ails you? Why can't you sit still—wriggling and writhing every minute?" "It's all your fault," blubbered the boy. "Why is it?" "Cos I asked you last night how much a billion was, and you said it was 'a d—d lot.' The teacher asked me the same question to-day and I said the same thing. And that's why I can't keep still."

The telegraph communication between Independence and Citrus has again been suspended, and all messages must now be sent and received at the latter place.

John Hays Hammond and three other reform leader against the Transvaal government, have had their sentences commuted to fifteen years imprisonment.

J. C. Roeper has erected a small water wheel and fan back of his butcher shop, for the purpose of forcing a current of air through the shop this hot weather.

We stated last week that registration would close 75 days before election, which was a mistake. It should have read 85 days before election.

Mistaken Idea of Teachers.

It has been asserted by some one that every human being has a right to happiness. If that be the case, most of us miss it mightily—that's all we have to say. A good deal of our failure to be happy is our own fault, but much of it is undeserved and purely the fault of others. If we chose to stop and think, we would soon see also how we in turn inflict unhappiness upon others in a most uncalled for way.

When we find one of our friends in an irritable mood, do we try to soothe him or go away and let him alone? Not by any means. We cast about in our minds to see what suggestions we can make that will irritate him a trifle more. This we do as a wholesome lesson, we profess. We want to teach him that there's no use in getting so cross about trifles. And what are we that we should set ourselves up as mentors to teach anybody anything! Let them learn their own lessons from life. That is a better teacher than we could possibly be.

Half the unhappiness that comes into children's lives—nay, three-fourths, we may say—arises from the unkind teasing and irritation of those older—even their adult relatives. "Oh, Mary's so cross!" they say, and then they proceed to make her crosser if possible by every petty aggravation they can think of. This should be classed under the head of cruelty to children, we think.—Philadelphia Call.

Critics and Managers.

Mr. Charles Wyndham has explained that his contempt for the press is not, like Mr. Penley's, absolute, but refers only to Christmastide criticisms. He holds, in short, that the critics are "but mad nor'-nor'west. When the wind is southerly, they know a hawk from a heronshaw." The truth is that some actor managers are superstitious in their reverence for the press so long as it prophecies smooth things for them. A critic the other day got into correspondence with a manager who thought he had slighted one of his productions. By way of conclusive testimony to its merits the manager sent him a paragraph emanating from an obscure press agency, to the effect that "if there is one thing in the world the lessee of this theater understands it is the histrionic tastes of the English people." This was of course most gratifying, but the beauty of it was that the writer of the paragraph evidently had not and did not profess to have seen the play, and had sent the paragraph to the manager with a demand for a couple of seats "so as to give further particulars in our next." Such is the flattering unction which some managers lay to their souls.—London World.

On Another Lay Now.

"I remember," said Mrs. Wickwire impressively, "you once said that if you had the world you would gladly lay it at my feet."

"Oh, did I?" asked Mr. Wickwire.

"Yes, you did. And now I have to nag at you for three days to get you to lay a carpet."—Washington Star.

ECZEMA From early childhood until I was grown my family spent a fortune trying to cure me of this disease. I visited Hot Springs and was treated by the best medical men, but was not benefited. When all things had failed I determined to try S.S.S., and in four months was entirely cured. The terrible eczema was gone, not a sign of it left. My general health built up, and I have never had any return of the disease. I have often recommended S.S.S. and have never yet known a failure to cure.

MAN WITHOUT MERCY.

Brutal Gen. Weyler, Commander of the Spanish Army in Cuba.

If current reports be true the most cruel general that old Rome ever produced was a mild, beneficent sort of man compared to him who is terrorizing the Cubans. Weyler was sent to end the revolution, and he is trying to do it in a way which calls to mind the atrocities perpetrated on the people by Valmaseda during the ten years' war in that unfortunate island. On April

CAPTAIN GENERAL WEYLER.

4, 1869, Valmaseda issued a proclamation in which the following lines occurred: "Every man from the age of 15 upward found away from his habitation and who does not prove a justified motive therefor will be shot." Weyler's proclamation is as foul as was Valmaseda's, and if his outrageous policy is pushed very far there are those high in the councils of this nation who declare that the only end will be war between the United States and Spain. It is next to impossible to believe that in this age of the world war should be so degraded as Weyler has degraded it. He notified all Cubans to join the Spanish ranks. He has decreed death for Cubans sympathizing with the cause of freedom, and declared trial by court-martial (another name for death) for those who circulate news favorable to the revolution and for those who shall speak adversely of him or of his army. His commanders have been given power to execute prisoners as they see fit. He has ordered the country people to quit their homes and remove to places designated by him. Indeed, he has done unspeakable things in Cuba. General Gomez, on the contrary, has treated captured Spaniards with every leniency and has given many prisoners their freedom unconditionally. It is possible that Weyler's brutality will cause a reversal of this policy and that General Gomez will take to shooting Spaniard for Cuban, a reprisal justifiable under the circumstances, but to be deplored beyond expression.

THE MANX CAT.

It Is Rightly Termed the Oddest of the Whole Feline Order.

The oddest of all felines is the Manx cat, which is, as its name implies, a native of the Isle of Man. One of its peculiarities is that it has no tail. Then, it is much larger, stronger and fiercer than the domestic cat. It has a bigger head, its hair is coarser and thicker and its hind legs, besides being larger, are formed almost like those of a hare.

This cat, although making its home among men, is still very shy, rejecting all friendly advances and being very apt to bite the hand that offers it a caress. It exists for the most part out of doors and is almost wholly self-supporting. It is a fine hunter, not only catching rats, but rabbits, hares and birds as well.

In regard to its being tailless, a writer states that the peculiarity, in all probability, originated in some disease of the caudal appendage, resulting from the dampness of the soil and the humidity of the climate. The effect of the disease was the rotting off of the tail and in time, it is supposed, it became hereditary.

As to the hind legs of the cat it is thought they became longer in obedience to the requirements of the creature's life, its home originally being among the hills, to which it fled on the approach of danger. Its long hind legs enable it to easily run up high hills while pursued by enemies.

Chinese Quail in Maryland.

Frank T. Redwood is interested in the increase of wild fowl in this country, and has an idea that Chinese quail may be successfully introduced. A friend brought him six of these birds a year ago. They were liberated in Talbot County, and flew off in the woods as naturally as though in China. But that was the last ever seen of them. They have disappeared entirely, so far as Mr. Redwood or his friends have been able to discover. Mr. Redwood is still firm in his faith that this species of bird will flourish in America, and to this end has arranged to have twenty pair brought over from China and let loose in the woods of Maryland.

If a girl is pretty when she is young, it is a good sign that she will be ugly when she is old.

"WHEN ELI'S HAD HIS DINNER."

On long, hot Sunday afternoons,
When we've got home from meetin,
An Eli's changed his pantaloons,
He's awful set on eatin.
He's that outrageous cross 'twould shame
An unconverted sinner.
I have to stand a heap of blame
Till Eli's got his dinner.

An so I'm never very slow
To get the kettle bilin;
I call it duty, for I know
His temper is a spilin,
I warm the taters an the meat
An don't let nothin hinder,
An then I let the feller eat,
An Eli gets his dinner.

Now, Eli's not a greedy man,
But somehow, come a Sunday,
He'll eat a bigger dinner than He'd think of on a Monday.
An when he's done he tips his chair
Back 'gainst the kitchen winder,
An soon you'll hear a snorin there
When Eli's got his dinner.

But when he's dozed a little while,
Half wakin an half sleepin,
He'll wake up in a better style
For Sunday an a deakin.
He'll talk so pious an so kind,
'Twould touch a hardened sinner;
A better man you'd never find
Than Eli after dinner.

BIG TOM, CONVICT.

There were those who said that convict 1280 was innocent of the crime which sent him to prison for such a long term of years, but that there was scarce a hope of his ever being a free man again. They meant that he was technically guilty. He had sought to save a woman from a beating at the hands of her husband, and in the struggle and excitement he had struck a blow which caused the death of the man. It was accident, in a sense, but it was also manslaughter. No man who is a man will stand by and see a woman beaten, and yet if he interferes he must take his chances with the law. Big Tom, as the convict was sometimes referred to, was, like most big men, a child in his gentleness and good nature. He did not complain, but he grieved. He thought of the years and years which must drag away before the prison doors would open to him, and he moved about like a weak, old man. The prison officials felt pity for the man, but a convict is a convict, and all must be treated alike—all who show obedience to the rules. They sized him up as childlike and good natured, and yet they said to each other as they talked of him:

"Look out for Big Tom! He will break loose some day and do some desperate thing!"

They thought it would come during the first six months of his term—then during the second—then they almost became afraid of him. Men who are slow to anger—who go on grieving, brooding and bearing a mental burden for weeks and months are devils when the climax comes.

Big Tom had the management of the trip hammer in the machine shop. Had they put him in the shoe shop or tailor shop he would have rebelled at once. His place was beside the biggest piece of machinery in the shops, two pieces of machinery, as it were—Tom and Trip. Day by day and week by week and month by month, as the ponderous hammer rose and fell and its blows shook the very earth for yards around, making the convict smile and look proud, the guards had an eye on him and kept saying to each other:

"It will come. It is only delayed. When he breaks loose, he will kill some one and have to be killed in turn."

Nearly half of the second year had passed, and the giant convict had never even sulked, when one day there came into the shop as sightseers a husband, wife and little girl 4 or 5 years old. Children are seldom seen in prisons, and it is a rare thing that they are taken into the shops in the yards. If any one in that prison knew that convict 1280 had a daughter—a fair haired, handsome child, who could only walk alone when the jury pronounced his verdict of "guilty"—he had forgotten the fact. His wife had visited him as often as visitors were allowed, but the child had never been seen within the grim walls. Knowing that her husband had killed a man by accident, the wife could bear to see him wearing the horrible stripes of a convict, but to let the child look upon him, to gaze in wonder at the iron bars, to ask why all those men were there, a thousand times no! And so this was the first child Big Tom had seen since the heavy doors shut him in. Father, mother and child came close to him and gazed at the ponderous hammer with wondering eyes. You would have argued that the sight of the child would have softened the convict's heart and brought tears to his eyes, but it did not. It brought a feeling of madness, of desperation, of frenzy. To save a woman from a brutal beating at the hands of a drunken, worthless thing not fit to be classed with men he had struck a blow.

A jury had called it murder in the second degree, and he was here in prison on a sentence almost never ending. He had been wronged, and the knowledge of it fired his heart and brought the long expected outbreak. With a sudden cry which startled every one in the noisy shop Big Tom made a spring forward, seized the child in his arms, and there was a shout of defiance on his lips as he held her at arm's length and glared about him. The mother of the child gasped for breath and staggered back to the wall and sank down. The father stood staring, as if struck dumb, but presently held out his hands in silent supplication. Big Tom glowered and muttered in reply. He was a convict, a childless father. He was dead to his child—she was dead to him. He could not make another father's heart ache and throb and grieve as his did, but he would secure revenge.

After muttering he was silent. No one cried out. Guards and convicts were seemingly stupefied. There was the hum of machinery, but not of voices. Convicts turned from forge and anvil and bench and lathe and held their breath. The two shop guards leaned forward in their chairs and looked and looked, but they did not move or cry out.

"What will he do with the child?"

The two men working at the trip hammer with Big Tom had fallen back. He had control of the machinery which worked it. The answer to the question could be read in his eyes. Men had wronged him under cover of the law. He had been deprived of liberty, degraded and disgraced. Death were more merciful than such a sentence as his, and in dying he would secure revenge. A piece of iron had been left under the hammer. There was heard the sound of crash! crash! crash! as the mass of iron rose and fell at regular intervals—that sounded above the monotonous hum of the machinery.

"He will thrust her under the hammer!"

So thought each guard and each convict—so thought the father, whose feet seemed chained to the floor and whose face was whiter than the dead. One of the guards could have touched a button and signaled the engineer to shut off steam, but he did not move a hand. Either guard had a fair mark to shoot at, but their pistols were not lifted. Up and down—up and down went the hammer, but suddenly the belt was thrown over on the loose pulley and the mass rested on the anvil. It seemed to those who looked as if they had been looking through a mist—such a mist as rises from earth of a summer morning. It seemed to them that this mist thinned out—cleared away before the influence of a rising sun, and by and by they saw the child nestling on Big Tom's hairy breast, one hand smoothing his cheek, and seeming to come from a long distance off they heard her childish voice saying:

"No, you wouldn't hurt Nellie—you wouldn't hurt Nellie! What makes you cry? Have you got a little girl too? Won't they let you go home to see your little girl?"

And the convicts advanced step by step, and the guards crept forward, and lo! Big Tom's tears were falling as he hugged the child more tightly and kissed her fair hair and rosy cheek. There was silence yet—silence as he walked to and fro and wept and sobbed and lifted the child till she could clasp her tiny arms about his neck and rest her cheek against his. Not a whisper among the convicts—not a move from father or mother or the guards. By and by Big Tom placed the child in its father's arms, wiped the tears from his eyes on the sleeve of his striped jacket, and with a "God bless the little darling!" and a "Thank ye, sir!" he returned to his work, and the hammer was lifted and held in waiting for the hot iron to be placed on the anvil beneath.

The guards motioned for the other convicts to go back to their benches and forges, and a minute later the visitors had gone and work was in full blast. The long expected outbreak had come and gone. For 30 seconds Big Tom had felt such a raging hate in his soul that he was transformed into a human devil. The child had smiled into his burning eyes—her soft touch had lulled him—her words had brought back his reason. Was he punished? No! A year later he was pardoned, and today another fair haired, blue eyed, smiling child puts her arms about his neck and says:

"You are such a great, big papa, but you wouldn't never hurt nobody, would you?"—Detroit Free Press.

A Gentlemanly Profession.

A city man was lately asked to recommend a nice, gentlemanly profession in which a quick fortune could be made without risk. He replied that he knew of only two such professions, and they were both rather hard to get into. They were the professions of Kaffir millionaire and American railroad reorganizer. The Kaffir millionaire is not entirely unknown to our readers, but perhaps they are not so well acquainted with the railroad reorganizer. His native habitat is New York, and he is only to be seen in London as a bird of passage. He may honor us with his company for a few days when on his way to the Riviera or the upper Nile, but he would be making himself too cheap if he were to recognize such a thing as business when he "had only run over for a short holiday." His work here is done vicariously through sympathetic agents or public spirited committees. He has also committees in New York, and nowadays he finds it necessary to have syndicates and underwriters as well.

A playful professional fiction assumes that these committees have been elected by the reorganized bond and stock holders to protect their interests. Another pleasant illusion gives the syndicates and the underwriters credit for stepping into the deadly breach to save the reorganization scheme from imminent peril. And they have to be paid accordingly, or, in professional phraseology, "compensated."—Saturday Review.

"The Christ of the Big Muddy."

"The Christ of the Big Muddy," also known as "Potter Christ," was a misguided individual who preached up and down the Missouri river about 25 years, particularly in the vicinity of Council Bluffs, Ia. He claimed to be the "Messenger of the New Covenant" as prophesied in Malachi, see iii, 1; also "The Deliverer," Romans xi, 26; "Everlasting Father," Isaiah ix, 6; the second Adam, the Lord from heaven, I Corinthians xv, 45. Besides the above he claimed several other divine titles, among them "Shiloh," "Morning Star," "Prince Michael," etc. He published a book entitled "Revelations Given by Inspiration of God For the Salvation of the Whole World." I have no record of what finally became of this eccentric individual. Some authorities list him among the "False Christs," but none that I have consulted tells where he was born or when and how he died.—St. Louis Republic.

Greely and Greeley.

"Do you know," said Representative Aldrich of Chicago, "meeting General Greely recently reminds me of a day at the World's fair, when we all stood with open mouth wonderment and interest, looking upon that scene, so graphically illustrated, of Greely and his little band of surviving explorers struggling with death and worse. At the same time we were listening with sadness to the eloquent recital which was given to groups of visitors every few moments by the attendant, when suddenly, during a pause in the proceedings, an old granger—that was his appearance—broke out feelingly, 'I allus thought it was a shame that Greely wa'n't elected president and said so to the Grant crowd to hum at the time.'"—Washington Post.

The Perspective.

She waved her hand imperiously.

"Be very careful," she commanded her maid, "of the perspective. You made me look dreadfully shallow last evening."

After that the making of her toilet proceeded without further interruption.—Detroit Tribune.

Riches without charity are nothing worth. They are a blessing only to him who makes them a blessing to others.—Fielding.

A Telltale Aureole.

A Boston newspaper—the Post—reports some interesting revelations made not long ago at a meeting of persons interested in psychical questions, so called. A woman, announced as possessed of mysterious powers—spiritual or other—had consented to be present, and something quite unusual was anticipated.

One member of the company, who believed in the old doctrine of "trying the spirits," went prepared to make some investigations on his own account. He carried with him some bits of phosphorescent paper, which in the dark would shine with a light like the firefly's.

In due time the "medium," or whatever she was called, presented herself, and after the usual preliminaries, requested that the lights should be turned out. This was done, and at the same moment the investigator managed to drop upon her head several pieces of his phosphorescent paper.

These were visible, of course, to every one except the performer herself. Pretty soon the "manifestations" began. A tambourine sounded in one corner of the room, and strange to say, the medium's shining head had moved over to that identical place. The sounds moved about the room—and the spots of light moved with them.

The spectators began to titter, the "medium" discovered that something was amiss, and the seance came to an abrupt conclusion.

To some people it seems a very interesting psychical phenomenon that any one should suspect visitors from the spirit world of drumming on tambourines.

LITTLE CUT AMBER NOW.

A Pipe Mouthpiece Three Inches Long Worth From $12 to $15.

"Is that real amber?" asked the man as he held up a pipe before the dealer. The pipe was a handsome brier wood one, and it had a clear amber mouthpiece nearly three inches long. The price mark was $3.50.

"Yes, it's real amber," said the dealer. "That is, it's as real as any amber you can get nowadays in a pipe. It is not cut from a piece of amber, but is made by a melting process. Ninety per cent of that mouthpiece is amber. The other 10 per cent is a composition used to harden it and make it stick together. Some years ago amber was plenty, and a pipe like that would have a mouthpiece of amber cut from a block and never melted. But the amber mines have practically given out, and you can't get any more big pieces. A piece of cut amber as long as that on the pipe you have there would be worth from $12 to $15, and it wouldn't be a bit better than the manufactured amber. It wouldn't be so durable and would not feel any better between the teeth."

"I was in England a year ago," said a man who had listened to the conversation, "and one of the largest pipe manufacturers there said that there had not been a piece of amber as long as three inches in the market for five years."

"That's so," said the pipe seller. "You may get a pipe with a genuine cut amber mouthpiece in some stores in New York, but if you look up its record you will find it was made eight or ten years ago and has been in stock. This composition is used today in expensive meerschaums as well as in brier woods."

A Productive Tax.

New Jersey has had a collateral inheritance tax a little more than three years, but its State treasury has been enriched to the amount of $363,086.59 by the tax during the time.

How an equal suffragist despises a woman who forgives a mean husband!

EASY COME, EASY GO.

The man who creeps along bent over, with his spinal column feeling in a condition to snap like a pipestem at any minute, would readily give a great deal to get out of his dilemma, and yet this is only the commonest form by which lumbago seizes on and twists out of shape the muscles of the back. This is commonly known as backache, a crick in the back, but by whatever name it may be known, and however bad it may be 10 minutes vigorous rubbing with St. Jacobs Oil on the afflicted part will drive out the trouble and completely restore. It is a thing so easily caught, it may be wondered at why there is not more of it, but because it is so easily cured by St. Jacobs Oil may be the very reason that we hear so little of it.

"Popper," the little boy asked, "what kind of a horse is it that they call a plug?" "A balky one, my son. They call him that because he is a stopper."

Spring Medicine

Your blood in Spring is almost certain to be full of impurities—the accumulation of the winter months. It is of the utmost importance that you

Football Incident.

During the last football season, the Indian school at Carlisle, Pa., sent a team of young red men into the field which competed with credit against some of the strongest playing clubs in the country. Among other engagements they played a match with the Duquesne club in Pittsburg, and came off victorious.

The bearing of the Indian lads was so courteous and manly as to win applause from all of the white spectators. After they returned home they received a cartoon from the defeated club, with a letter stating that it was "from some of the many friends whom you boys have made in Pittsburg by your gentlemanly playing."

The sketch was drawn with spirit, and represented at one side the contest between the red and white men at Fort Duquesne in 1795, the Indians falling beneath the shots of the settler. On the other side was their contest in 1895, the red man standing, football in hand, victorious over his white brother; and lastly, a picture of the captain of the Indian club as he was carried, laughing, off the field in triumph by both shouting teams.

Beneath was written the suggestive word, "Revenge."

If the manliness and magnanimous courtesy of these Indian and white clubs were shown by all football players, the prejudice of many thoughtful men and women against the game would be lessened if not removed. When instead of making men more brutal it teaches them self-control, good temper, and the generosity which can applaud a victorious foe, its discipline is wholesome.

FAIR AND FRUITFUL

As the West is, it is often malarious. But it is pleasant to know that a competent safeguard in the shape of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters exists, which absolutely nullifies the poison of miasma. Western bound emigrants should bear this in mind. Nor should it be forgotten, the bitters is a sterling remedy for dyspepsia, biliousness, constipation, kidney and nervous complaints and rheumatism.

The Burglar's Bugbears.

A reformed burglar, who has no further use for the knowledge himself, says there are three things a night thief dreads. One is a baby, the second is a little whiffet dog that can sleep with both eyes open and barks when a needle falls, and the third is a newspaper. Almost always the paper rattles or crackles when a foot touches it. Unless a burglar is so desperate that he will risk his own life, he will leave the moment he strikes a house strewn with newspapers.

MATER DOLOROSA.

Because of one small low laid head all crowned
With golden hair,
Forevermore all fair young brows to me
A halo wear.
I kiss them reverently. Alas! I know
The pain I bear.

Because of dear but close shut holy eyes
Of heaven's own blue,
All little eyes do fill my own with tears—
Whate'er their hue—
And motherly I gaze their innocent,
Clear depths into.

Because of little pallid lips, which once
My name did call,
No childish voice in vain appeal upon
My ears doth fall.
I count it all my joy their joys to share
And sorrows small.

Because of little dimpled hands
Which folded lie,
All little hands henceforth to me do have
A pleading cry.
I clasp them as they were small wandering birds
Lured home to fly.

Because of little death cold feet, for earth's Rough roads unmeet,
I'd journey leagues to save from sin or harm
Such little feet,
And count the lowliest service done for them
So sacred—sweet!

—M. E. Paul in Altruist Interchange.

A QUEER ADVENTURE

It happened about seven years ago. I had been transacting some business in London, and was returning by the afternoon mail to my home in the country. Being the only occupant of the carriage in which I rode, I broke the tedium of the journey by reading, in the dim light of the chill December day, some of the several periodicals with which I had furnished myself at the bookstall previous to my departure from the station.

The papers at that time were full of accounts respecting some startling outrages committed just previously by a band of desperate Nihilists, who, in their own particular manner, were levying war upon civilization in a well known European capital. The reports were alarmingly graphic, and an air of insecurity was engendered by reading them, for rumor had it that the ramifications of these champions of assassination were well nigh limitless, extending into other lands besides their own, and it was plainly hinted that England was shortly to receive a special share of their attentions.

I read on until the growing darkness rendered the operation too difficult to be longer indulged in, and then mused upon what I had read until, half my journey being accomplished, it became necessary for me to change my train. With a quarter of an hour to spare, I entered the buffet attached to the station at which I had stopped, with the object of obtaining some needed refreshment. Having eaten nothing since breakfast, I was hungry, and looked round for something substantial wherewith to appease my appetite.

The only available thing besides the usual sandwich was a German sausage, which I began to tackle without the least compunction. Although not an edible that I usually indulge in—to be correct, I had never before tasted it—the inelegant polony seemed to my sharpened palate quite toothsome food, and I ate vigorously, and felt, as I believed, all the better for it when the time came to resume my journey.

I had a companion this time, a man who, like myself, was closely wrapped, and who occupied the seat directly opposite to the corner one in which I placed myself. In his hand I noticed that he carried a small, oblong parcel, incased in brown paper and tied with a strip of thin string, so arranged as to form a loop for the fingers that held it.

On starting my fellow traveler made a few commonplace remarks about the weather, and later on, with an air of decided sociability, offered me his flask. I am aware that it is not ordinarily advisable to accept hospitality in this way from a stranger, and it is a thing I always set my face against, but in this instance I broke through my custom and took the proffered drink, and then, drawing my wraps closely around me, snuggled into my corner and tried to make myself comfortable for the rest of the ride.

I had not been long thus ensconced when a kind of drowsy stupor began to creep over me, which steadily increased, despite repeated efforts on my part to shake it off. As I sat in this semiconscious state my thoughts reverted to the nihilistic literature I had been reading, and instantly it occurred to me that the brandy I had been drinking was drugged. The thought was not a pleasant one, and, somewhat alarmed by it, I made a further attempt to rouse myself from the lethargy into which I was falling, but without success. Suddenly I lost consciousness entirely, and everything became a blank.

It was only for a few moments, however, for my senses returned as quickly as they had left me, although my power of action was quite gone. I seemed like a person under the influence of some mesmeric spell, from which there was no escape. In this condition my gaze instinctively turned to my companion, and I noticed, as I thought, a mysterious change in his appearance. His complexion had assumed a malignant air, his eyes wore a wild look and round his mouth there curled a cunning smile.

As I sat watching him, he began to undo the parcel in his hands, and drawing away the paper in which it was inclosed exposed to view a box apparently made of tin. A little hinged door on one of its sides, which he presently opened, showed that the interior was filled with a species of clockwork arrangement, and instinctively I guessed that the thing I beheld was one of those diabolical inventions which have come to be known by the term of infernal machines.

On beholding this horrible engine of destruction, which, for aught I knew, might be fused ready for its dreadful work, my first thought was to stretch out my hand for the communication cord, and, by stopping the train, let the authorities know the manner of man they were carrying; but, on attempting to rise, I found that my limbs utterly refused their office, and I was as helpless as though I had been bound hand and foot. My companion, evidently divining my intention, spoke:

"You are powerless to move," he said, addressing me. "The potion imbibed from my flask is a special decoction which will prevent action on your part for some time to come. So sit still and listen! You know, doubtless, what this is," he continued, pointing to the box, which he had placed on the seat beside him, "and most likely you guess what I am at the same time. In case you do not, I will tell you at once that I am one of that noble band who have for their object in life the emancipation of mankind from the tyranny of authority!"

"In other words, you are a nihilist—a dynamitard?" I suggested.

"Use those terms if you like," he replied. "There is nothing in a name. Acts are the things whereby men are judged. Hear what I have to say! The society to which I belong has decreed the immediate doom of an authoritative rule, and with that object has dispatched emissaries far and wide to carry out its behests. A big blow is shortly to be struck, and there is not a country in the whole of Europe which will escape it. Russia, Germany, Austria, France, all are condemned, and even England, the vaunted home of the free, is not to be exempt. At the present moment there are 99 picked men, armed with the most deadly bombs, in London itself, awaiting the signal to commence. One more worker is required, and I am commissioned to find some one to supply the want. I have done so, and my choice falls upon you!"

I started in my seat at these words, uttered in a fiercely earnest tone. He concluded:

"You; yes, you must become one of us; must enroll yourself under the banner of emancipation, and strike a blow for liberty!"

"And what if I refuse?" I inquired, as quietly as my excitement would allow. He leaned forward and hissed rather than spoke in my ear:

"If you will not do this, then you yourself are doomed! Mark me, unless you join our ranks you will never leave this train alive!"

"Who will prevent me?" I asked, again making a vain endeavor to rise.

"I will!" he shouted fiercely.

"I defy you!" I exclaimed, with a firmness I did not really feel, thinking that a determined attitude might possibly overawe him, for assassins are invariably cowards. I was mistaken in my man, however, for on hearing my words he put his hand under the cloak that enveloped him and drew forth a poniard, the sharp pointed edge of which he felt critically with the tip of his finger.

"I will give you one minute in which to consider your decision," he said, "and if at the end of that time you remain obdurate, then this blade goes straightway through your heart!"

In order, I suppose, to amuse himself during the interval, he pricked several holes with the point of the instrument in his arm just above the wrist, from each of which the blood squirted in small, purple jets, showing how sharp was the weapon's edge. In a little while he said:

"The time is up! What say you now?"

"What I said before," I replied. "Do your worst!"

Instantly he sprang to his feet and clutched me by the throat.

"Coward!" I cried, half choking as I was, and struggling in his iron grasp.

The epithet seemed to madden him, for his face became livid with sudden rage, his eyes glared wildly and his breath came in thick and hurried gasps.

"You shall never say that again!" he shouted, tightening his hold till the blood swelled up in my face and my eyes seemed ready to fly from their sockets.

With the energy of despair I made one final attempt to recover my power of action and felt that I was succeeding. The effect of the potion was evidently working off, and with use returning to my limbs I realized that now was my time. Concentrating all the strength I had into one tremendous effort, I managed to free myself from his grip and immediately closed with him. We struggled violently together for a few seconds, neither gaining the mastery, and then I stumbled and we both fell to the ground, he uppermost. It seemed that my hour was come, for in his hand he held the deadly weapon. As I saw the gleaming blade descend in one swift stroke, I raised my voice and shouted:

* * * * * * *

"Tickets, please! All tickets ready!"

It was the summons of the collector. I rubbed my eyes and looked around. There was my fellow traveler sitting quietly on the seat opposite, regarding me with an amused expression on his face.

"Been sleeping?" he queried as my gaze caught his.

"I suppose I have," was my hazy reply.

"And dreaming, too," he added, with a smile. "Unpleasantly I should guess by your manner!"

It was so. The substantial repast of which I had partaken had been the means of bringing on a heavy slumber which lasted right on to my journey's end, and the fearful adventure through which I had been passing was not, as I had imagined it, a thing of reality, but only a horrid nightmare, engendered by the reception of a mass of indigestible food into a constitutionally dyspeptic stomach.

My companion of course was no more a nihilist than I was. The only fusible article inside his brown paper parcel was a box containing a hundred choice cigars, and his flask, he assured me, held nothing more injurious to the system than a quantity of fine old cognac.

As I related to him the experience through which I had gone, he indulged in a hearty laugh, and while I could not refrain from joining him, even at my own expense, I inwardly registered a vow to give German sausage a very wide berth for the future.—London Tit-Bits.

FROM SAP TO SUGAR.

CURIOSITIES OF THE MAPLE SUGAR BUSINESS.

How the Sap Is Obtained and How Manufactured Into Sugar and Syrup—A Profitable Thing for the Farmers of Vermont State.

The Maple Sugar Industry.

The process of making maple sugar and syrup is quite interesting to the majority of people of this country. While some maple sugar is made in New Hampshire, northern New York and Massachusetts, the bulk of it is manufactured in Vermont. The sap of the sugar maple begins to run about March 10 usually, and continues three or four weeks according to the weather. Sap will run only when the thermometer registers at least 32 degrees F., and stops flowing as soon as the frost is out of the ground, or directly after the snow is gone. The sugar season comes when the Vermont farmer cannot profitably employ his time otherwise.

As soon as the weather is favorable the Vermont farmer gets out his buckets and sets to work tapping his trees as quicky as possible. The maple trees are tapped by boring the trunks with a small bit—usually a half-inch bit—about 1½ inches deep, and from one to three feet above the ground. Trees are not tapped until they are one foot in diameter. After tapping, a spout made of clean maple, beech, tin or galvanized iron and fitted with a hanger for holding the bucket, is driven firmly into the hole made by the bit. A bucket of tin or wood is hung upon the spout, and the tapping process is finished. The buckets are like ordinary water pails, generally all alike, and each farmer usually paints all his buckets one color.

THE HANGING BUCKETS.

Only one hole is bored in young trees, but it is not uncommon to have as many as six buckets with two spouts each hung to maples of large size. If the bucket fills with sap in a day the run is a good one, although twice this amount is obtained in exceptionally favorable sap days. What is called a "good sized" sugar orchard will contain from 500 to 800 trees, and in the northern and central parts of Vermont orchards of 2,000 to 4,000 trees are not uncommon.

When the sap begins to run well the farmer and his family must work hard. A man with a large farm will employ help outside of his family frequently, and use two or three pair of oxen or horses to make the rounds of the trees with a sled, on which is the large sap tub, into which the sap from the buckets is poured. An orchard of 700 or 800, or even 1,000 trees, need not require the farmer to hire help if he has two or three boys in the family besides himself. From an orchard of 700 trees an ordinary run of sap for two days will enable the farmer to collect about 80 barrels. Sometimes 60 barrels of sap can be collected from 700 trees in one day.

As soon as the men begin to collect the sap the fires in the big evaporator furnace must be started, and the boiling of the sap begun as fast as it is brought in, so that none will be wasted by souring, or that the quantity brought from the woods may not so far exceed the accommodations at the house, that while waiting to get room for it much will be wasted at the trees. At the time when the sap is running freely the farmer must often keep the fires going and the sap boiling all through the night, and, of course, he is likely to have to work all day Sunday and Sunday night. It is all-important that he "make hay while the sun shines."

When the work is hardest the fun is at its best. Those who have but a small orchard will spare some of the family to help a relative or neighbor through sugaring.

The modern evaporator makes it possible to do much sugar-making in a short time. The evaporator is made of tin, copper or galvanized iron, and is so constructed that the sap flows in at one end, and by means of partitions extending nearly across the other end, where it is drawn off as syrup. The sap in the pan is kept shallow—about one-half inch in depth—and evaporates very rapidly. Rapidity of evaporation is greatly to be desired, not only on the score of economy of time, but because the sooner the sap is converted into syrup after it runs from the trees, the lighter will be the color and the finer the flavor of the syrup and sugar.

The sugar house is a rough little building with a shed half full of well-dried cordwood. The room is mainly occupied by the boiling apparatus, and with the bunk of the man who has to watch pans of boiling sap day and night. One side is taken up by the oven, which is built on a bed of brick, and consists of two brick walls, about 2 feet apart, 2½ feet high and about 12 feet long. A huge old-fashioned brick chimney is at one end, where there is also a sort of square brick furnace to hold a big kettle. In the roof, near the center of the ridge pole, a large slot opens to the sky as an escape for the steam, which rises in heavy volumes from the pans on the fire.

The sap as it comes from the maple tree is like water, and has barely any more flavor than good water. But it doesn't take much heat to produce flavor. A barrel of good sap will make a gallon of syrup, or eight pounds of sugar. After being reduced to syrup in the evaporator the product is allowed to cool and settle, more or less impurities being precipitated by standing. The syrup is now ready for putting into cans for sale. The size most in use is a one-gallon can.

The proper consistency of syrup is generally conceded to be 11 pounds to the gallon, and this degree of density is reached at 219 degrees Fahrenheit. The sap is never made into more than syrup in the evaporator. Then it is poured into a large porcelain-lined kettle to be boiled to sugar. If wanted for sugar, the boiling is continued until the thermometer indicates 323 degrees for pail sugar, or 238 or 240 degrees for cakes, when the mass is removed from the fire, stirred briskly for a short time, and then poured into tin pails or cake molds, as the case may be, to harden.

The cake molds are often a series of parallel partitions on a large wooden board, with space in them about 3 inches apart, and just wide enough to admit a knife blade. The molds are dampened with a sponge, then the hot water poured in. Little fancy tins are also used for molds. The farmer gets anywhere from 10 to 18 cents a pound for his sugar, and from 75 cents to $1 a gallon for his syrup. A sugar maple produces on an average about 3½ pounds of sugar during a season.

Compliment to a Soldier.

During the siege of Paris Marshal Canrobert found himself for a moment in the presence of a party of ladies. They were very much agitated. "What is the matter, ladies?" the marshal asked.

"The matter?" said Madame Brohan, in whose house the people were assembled. "Why, we are on the eve of battle, and I suppose fear affects us."

"Fear?" echoed the marshal, looking about with a puzzled air.

Madame Brohan rang her bell.

"Marie," she said, when the maid appeared, "bring a dictionary for the marshal!"

Which was as much as to say that the old commander did not know the meaning of the word.

They Never Move.

There are but two European potentates who manage to get along without change of residence. These are the Pope of Rome and the Sultan of Turkey. The Sultan has never left Constantinople since he ascended the throne in such tragic circumstances nineteen years ago, and his Holiness has remained within the precincts of the Vatican since the triple tiara was placed upon his head.

"Moral courage," said the teacher, "is the courage that makes a boy do what he thinks is right, regardless of the jeers of his companions." "Then," said Willie, "if a feller has candy and eats it all hisself, and ain't afraid of the other fellers callin' him stingy, is that moral courage?"—Atlanta Constitution.

PLUCKY TOM TOBIN.

A TOUGH OLD PIONEER SCOUT WHO WAS DANGER PROOF.

His Countless Scars Left by Indians, Grizzlies, Mountain Lions and Snakes—His Famous Feat of Killing the Two Espinosa Outlaws at One Shot.

"Tom Tobin was 80 years old and over when he died not long ago, but he was game to the last," said an ex-army officer. "He was a brother-in law of Kit Carson, and the last of that pioneer band of scouts, Indian fighters, hunters and trappers that ventured upon the unknown frontier way back in the thirties. When he died, he was the worst chawed and clawed up man, I guess, that ever took a life course in the Rocky mountain school of experience. He bore the marks of grizzly bears, mountain lions, Indians, bad men and other wild animals from the crown of his head to the sole of his feet. He had been shot 19 times. Indians took his scalp once and left him for dead. Four times he had been stripped pretty much bare of flesh by grizzlies, and three times chewed out of shape by mountain lions. Rattlesnakes had sunk fangs into him three different times without putting him to any great inconvenience. The last time I saw old Tom, which was only a little while before he died, he said, with a shake of his head:

"'I hain't no room for any more scars or I think I'd wabble out and give somethin else a chance at me. I'd like to have a Geely monster try me once jest to see what he could do.'

"Tom was a tough piece of bone and sinew and no mistake. His fame was great in the early days. Indians feared him. Horse thieves and other outlaws gave a locality wide berth if Tom Tobin was known to be hanging around it. Colorado ought to put up a monument to him, for he risked his life once to do an act that with one crack of his rifle set that territory ahead ten years at least. That exploit was the ending of the career of the two Espinosas, Mexican brothers, who were the boldest, bloodthirstiest, most dreaded desperadoes of all the murderous outlaws that terrorized that part of the country in the pioneer days. I've heard old timers say that the very mention of the name of the Espinosas was enough to make the settlers shudder. These cutthroats committed murder for the sake of murder. The most brutal Sioux of those days would have hesitated before committing some of the crimes that these two Mexicans were guilty of.

"Fort Garland was the military post that guarded the interests of the Colorado settlers. The troops there were under command of Colonel Tappan. In 1862 the Espinosas had brought one portion of the territory under such a reign of terror that the inhabitants sought the aid of Colonel Tappan in ridding the region of the Mexican cutthroats and robbers. In their appeal to the colonel they declared that ranchmen, stockmen, miners and all classes in the San Juan country simply took their lives in their hands when they went about their affairs. Colonel Tappan detailed a company of men to seek the trail of the Mexican outlaws and hunt them to the death. Rewards to the amount of $3,000 had been offered by the territorial legislature for the taking of the Espinosas dead or alive. Tom Tobin was at Fort Garland when the company of troops was ordered out to hunt the desperadoes down, and volunteered to go along.

"Two days after the start Tobin discovered the trail of the Mexicans. It led to the heart of the Sangro de Cristo mountains. The desperate character of the Mexicans was shown by their holding up the Placerville stage, killing the driver and two of the passengers, and robbing the mails and express boxes the very day Tobin discovered their camp, in a deep and lonely gulch in the mountains. This was five days after the discovery of their trail. Tobin had told the lieutenant of the company that he needn't attempt to take the Mexicans alive, because they wouldn't be taken, and any attempt to do it would result only in the death of all that made it.

"'There ain't any use of that,' said Tom. 'I'll follow these greasers to their hole. If I come back, I'll have 'em both. If I don't come back, they'll have me.'

"Tom followed the trail into this gulch until he came to the isolated and almost inaccessible spot where the Espinosas had made their camp. Like a shadow he crept on until he could see the two desperadoes. They were absorbed in taking an inventory of plunder, which proved to be the proceeds of the Placerville stage robbery. Tobin worked himself around until he had the outlaws in range. He knew his rifle; he knew himself. When his rifle cracked, there were no more Espinosas—not on earth. Tom had killed them both at one shot. Then he deliberately, and, he always said, joyfully, cut off their heads. He carried those ghastly trophies to Fort Garland, and when the news spread about the country the people went wild. They hailed Tom Tobin as their deliverer and went about their affairs no longer with fear and trembling. But that was all they did. They soon forgot the great thing Tobin had done for them, and even the legislature ignored him for ten years, when, under pressure, it paid the old scout $500 on account.

"The last time I saw old Tom I asked him if Colorado had settled with him yet.

"'Not yet,' he said, 'But I hear they're thinkin somethin o' talkin about it.'"—New York Sun.

Meant Well.

Willie (handing his uncle a bottle of glue)—I hope you will have a very happy birthday, Uncle Dick.

Uncle Dick—Thank you, little man, but what is this for?

Willie—Oh, I thought you would be so pleased with it. I heard papa say the other night that you never could make your stories stick together.—Vanity.

SAVED THE INFANT'S LIFE.

An Incubator Was the Means Employed by Dr. De Marville.

The incubator has already done considerable for weak infants and many lives have been saved by the use of it. One of the most remarkable instances of the kind was where Dr. De Marville, of San Francisco, saved the life of his infant daughter. The incubator used was shaped like a bath tub, and was 3 feet long and about 18 inches high. It looked as though one bath tub had been placed inside the other, and then soldered together. The intervening space was filled with the cottons and soft flannels in which the infant was rolled. The purpose of the warm water circulating between the tubs was to maintain the temperature at 99 degrees. A thermometer was placed among the blankets to give notice of a change in temperature. Then the water was cooled or warmer water was run in as was found necessary. At one end of the apparatus was a hole and plug where the warm water was run in and at the other end was a faucet to let it run out.

Dr. De Marville's baby was rapidly wasting away, but the moment she was placed in the incubator she began to mend, and in a fortnight she was increasing her weight at the rate of one pound a week. At the end of six weeks she was taken from the incubator and now she is as fine and healthy a looking baby as any of her size. The incubator made a name for itself. Beyond the fact that it furnished the proper heat to encourage the vital spark to its full glow it differs from anything previously designed as an incubator. It is expected that this new variety of incubator will prove very useful at hospitals, and that it will be the means of saving many tender young lives that now perish despite the most careful attendance.

HOME MADE BICYCLES.

Attracted More Attention than the High Grade Wheels.

While there were hundreds of different makes of bicycles on exhibition at the cycle show in New York city, there were none that attracted more attention than the two which are here shown. They were made by country boys who were determined to ride bicycles, but who did not have cash enough with which to purchase a factory wheel. The first illustration is of a wheel constructed by a New Jersey lad. It is after the style of the old-fashioned high "bike." It is a unique and clever mechanical contrivance and is made of wood throughout, even the wheels being solid. The latter are fitted with hose pipe tires.

The other wheel, as will be seen by the illustration, is a true safety, and is the production of a clever Indiana lad. The frame and wheels are of wood, the latter having carriage wheel hubs and broad flat rims. The seat is padded, leather covered, and ingeniously mounted on a spiral spring to absorb the jar from rough roads. Even the lantern is home made, and is cleverly contrived from old tin can. Both of these wheels are now owned by a manufacturer of a very popular wheel.

Economical Engineering.

The truly gifted engineer always makes one part of his work fit into another, and no energy is ever wasted. A wealthy engineer who had set up a very fine place in the country, where he had carried out many pet constructive projects, was visited there by an old friend.

The visitor had so much difficulty in pushing open his front gate that he spoke about it to the proprietor.

"You ought to fix that gate," said the guest. "A man who has everything 'just so' should not have a gate that is hard to open."

"Ha!" exclaimed the engineer, "you don't understand my economy. That gate communicates with the waterworks of the house, and every person who comes through it pumps up four gallons of water!"

It seems easier to manage the business of other people than your own.

the deception. The fellow ha remedies as absurd as this. We fill them—out of the simple ce less drug if it be something else.

Investigation disclosed the f
the various portions of the city ha peculiarities in beliefs as to the of various unusual remedies.
Swedish settlements man oil is to have marvelous virtues in aches pains when applied externally. Over the stockyards region and in the sou west portion of the city dog's grease held in high repute as a specific for con sumption. The men in charge at the dog pound declare a great many of the dogs that come to an untimely end in the death chamber there are converted i a superior article of cod liver oil for use of consumptives. They declare th a number of "doctors" regularly vis the pound and select nice, fat dog which are slaughtered by the attend to be rendered into oil for the physicians' patients. Not only th the patients themselves often send re tives or friends to the pound to get do for this purpose. Usually the attendan kill and dress the dogs, receiving small fee for their trouble. Sometimes the dogs are taken away to be killed.
One dealer said he usually got from half a gallon to a gallon of oil from a dog; that the grease resembled lard oil in appearance; that the oil had no disagreeable odor if the dog was young; that the dose was a tablespoonful three times a day. An interesting feature brought out was that after a person had once used dog's grease other remedies would have no effect whatever on him.

Out on Milwaukee avenue rainworm oil and ant spirits are held in high repute. The druggists have frequent calls for these remedies and they always fill the prescriptions, the former out of the olive oil bottle and the latter with alcohol slightly colored. The Germans believe both remedies are valuable for external use for all sorts of aches and pains, including rheumatism. The Snake oil is regularly quoted in some drug price lists. A man named Schuh at Cairo, Ills., is engaged in its manufacture. John Jones of Phenix, A. T., devotes his entire time to the manufacture of rattlesnake oil, for which he gets $4 a pound, the purchaser to pay express charges. Snake oil is reputed to be valuable for rheumatism. He comes to the city occasionally to work up trade.

Skunk oil is in considerable demand, also for rheumatism. The skunk oil is obtained from the skunk farms, where the animals are bred for their skins.
Belief in these remedies is often found among American born people.

In all parts of the city there is a good trade in "love powders," the purchasers usually being of the servant girl class.

"When a girl comes in after 'love powders,'" said a drug clerk on North State street who often has occasion to fill such orders, "I give her a little sugar of milk, which is absolutely innocuous, if she wants it for herself, and tell her to take two doses a day. If she wants it for her 'fellow,' she usually asks for the magic drug in the shape of candy. In that case I give her some worm lozenges. The drugs must give satisfaction, for the orders are frequently refilled."—Chicago Tribune.

Genesis of Cotton In America.

The first planting of cotton seed in the colonies was in the Carolinas in the year 1621, when seeds were planted as an experiment in a garden. Winthrop says that in 1643 "men fell to the manufacture of cotton, whereof we have great stores from Barbados." In 1736 it was cultivated in the gardens along Chesapeake bay, especially in the vicinity of Baltimore, and at the opening of the Revolution it was a garden plant in New Jersey and New York, but its real value seems to have been almost unknown to the planters up to about 110 years ago.—St. Louis Republic.

The delegates were instructed to urge the demanding of free and unlimited

The underground railway scheme for New York city has been killed. It may be revived at some later date, but it is doubtful. The enormous cost of the enormous cost of the work is enough of itself to preclude it in the opinion of many persons competent to form an intelligent judgment. It is doubtful if the city needs a railroad system of that kind.
Experience shows that elevated roads and rapid surface transit give a fair solution to the transit problem.

Andrew Carnegie, who sells armor plate to the United States Government at $600 per ton while he sells exactly similar armor plate to the Russian Government at $300 a ton, thinks that it would be a monstrous crime to restore bimetallism in this country, because the bullion value of silver is now only about 50 per cent. of its coinage value under the old ratio. Isn't he a fine authority on the money question.—[Gazette.

The cyclone season appears to have set

They expect to returned home to-day.

The Future of the Big Canal

Mr. Frederick Stock, who has been in England for the past ten months in the interest of the Canal Company as well as the Railway Company, is again with us. He is accompanied by Samuel L. Turner, Esq. A. I. C. E. We give the gentlemen a hearty welcome. Mr. Turner has been sent here to report upon the enterprise generally for the London Company, and should his report be favorable the works will be immediately pushed on to completion. Mr. Stock, President of the Owens Valley Railway, has been successful in raising through his friends in London several millions of dollars to complete these great undertakings, and every citizen of Inyo County sincerely hope that the report of Mr. Turner, will be all that the London capitalists desire. Mr. Stock stated that the two most important questions the Engineer had to decide was: First, the sufficiency of the water in Owens River to irrigate the 200,000 acres of land, and the supplying of new towns. Second, would the water sell after the canal was completed, to the present land owners and further settlers.

We wish to impress deeply upon Mr. Stock, Engineer Turner and their London friends, that previous engineers who have examined the water in Owens River for the same purpose it is now intended to be used have reported it as being more than sufficient for this purpose. Respecting the sale of this water from the canal, one has only to look at the surroundings of other districts, which a few years ago was a desert, but with a system of canals have become rich and populated places. The question of selling the water is the most easy in this great undertaking. Mr. Stock has been to England several times at a great expense to himself in behalf of this enterprise and he deserves success, which we all wish him and we also hope Engineer Turner will endorse the report of prior engineers so that the works may be completed. By doing this he will confer upon this section of the County one of greatest boons ever bestowed upon mankind. The two gentlemen left for Los Angeles last Wednesday morning, going by private convevance.

Aurora

The first load of ore from Aurora, to be practically tested by Parr & Tyack was hauled to the Syndicate mill on Tuesday More will follow, until the proposed quantity of twenty tons is on hand. The tailings will be submitted to the cyanide process, and if there is an encouraging profit it is probable that reduption works of some description will be erected at Aurora, when the most abandoned old camp will revive again. It would be singular if, after all these years of inactivity, it should take a new lease of life and become a bullion producer once more; but Bodie lay dorment for 10 years, yet it awoke and came to the front. So there is hope for Aurora.—Mining Index.

Submarine Railway.

The submarine railroad, for the new steamer at Lake Tahoe, was sunk Tuesday. It was constructed on the beach about a mile north of Glenbrook and was towed into position and sunk. A diver is emaloyed to spike the railway in position. The track is nearly 500 feet long and constructed of the strongest material, banded together with iron and six feet wied. The new boat will be run into the water several times before launching and ballasted,—Truckee Republican.

Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness, without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, and sold by all reputable druggists.

They Find Mr. Quay.

"The way in which Mr. Quay does the little—in fact, most trivial—things indicates the shrewdness and uniqueness of his personality," remarked a Senate employe the other day.

"For instance, any man that comes to Washington to see Mr. Quay, and whom Mr. Quay wants to see—and there are hundreds of them—will go directly to his room, that of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and never ask a question of any kind. Not so with the friends of other Senators, for, while they may have been told how to reach their different rooms, they have, as a rule, to make inquiry for their location. I was amused the other day, when the callers for Mr. Quay were unusually large, to see how they went directly to his room, notwithstanding the circuitous route necessary to get to it. When I asked one of them how he knew where to find the room he showed me a card. It told the story. It contained very minute directions as to how to reach the Senator, and just what to do."—Washington Star.

Glad to Get Back.

Judge James H. Mulligan, United States consul to Samoa, who returned to his home in Lexington, Ky., recently, was given a banquet. At the banquet he made an address, the most remarkable part of which was the following:

"When I was away off on that little speck of land in the Pacific ocean and looked across the vast stretches of sea to the storms that were agitating this country, I could see no Democrats and no Republicans. It was America. The English, the Germans and all the others are against America, no matter what the diplomats may say. I feel that I have learned more in the last two years than I have learned before. I have borne my part in the battles of politics, have spoken bitter words, but when I stood under that mighty crag on that far-away speck in the ocean and helped to lay him to rest whom I had learned to love, and who I believe had learned to love me—Robert Louis Stevenson—I felt that if I ever got back home, I would not speak in an unkind word to a fellow-countryman, but would do all I could to bind up any wounds that I may have caused."

Don Cameron's Weakness.

J. Donald Cameron, of Pennsylvania, who is just retiring from the Senate, was carefully trained in the art of politics by his father, Lincoln's famous Secretary of War. In the days when Cameron ruled Pennsylvania with absolute power one of its faithful henchmen was calling upon Simon Cameron, and in the course of the conversation he remarked:

"Senator, why is it that Don has never made much of a success of politics? He seems to have talent, and he has all the advantages of your prestige and influence."

"Well, Don is a likely fellow," replied the old man. "Don will get on all right. You must remember I started in life with a big advantage over Don."

"What was that?" asked the visitor.

"Poverty."

Insignia of High Rank.

In feudal days the sword was the insignia of rank. Worn as a part of a gentleman's ordinary dress, it was the outward and visible sign of superiority over the masses. Early in the eighteenth century it began to be laid aside, partly because it was cumbrous and partly because it led to mischief, not only in the chivalric form of extemporized duels between equals, but in cold-blooded murders of inferiors by "gentlemen." The noisy, drunken and bloodthirsty young ruffians of rank who at the beginning of the eighteenth century banded themselves together under the title of Mohocks increased the popular disgust against sword wearing. When Beau Nash, in the decade between 1730 and 1740, organized the fashionable society of England at Bath, he discouraged the wearing of swords as contrary to the repose and security of the water drinking, dancing and gambling world. From that time the fashion was doomed. Yet it lingered on, not only in England, but in America, until the close of the eighteenth century. The French revolution put an end to it in France at the same period. Yet traces of the old fashion survive even to this day in the irrelevant and useless buttons which still figure at the backs of gentlemen's coats, originally placed there to support the sword belt, and in the ungainly outline of the modern dress coat, which is the outcome of the habit of turning back the skirt of the full dress coat of the last century so as to conceal the greater part of the sword.—New York Herald.

The New Photography.

Oh, Roentgen, then the news is true,
And not a trick of idle rumor,
That bids us each beware of you
And of your grim and graveyard humor.

We do not want, like Dr. Swift,
To take our flesh off and to pose in
Our bones or show each little rift
And joint for you to poke your nose in.

We only crave to contemplate
Each other's usual full dress photo.
Your worse than "altogether" state
Of portraiture we bar in toto.

The fondest swain would scarcely prize
A picture of his lady's framework.
To gaze on this with yearning eyes
Would probably be voted tame work.

No. Keep them for your epitaph,
These tombstone souvenirs unpleasant,
Or go away and photograph

In the Stocks.

Early in the present century, in 1805, my father and mother were enjoying their honeymoon in the country. My father was 23, his bride only 20. One day in their wanderings they came to the village stocks. He sat down on the bench, just to try how it felt, and placed his feet in the semicircular holes; she in girlish fun shut down the top board, when, to her horror, she found that it closed with a spring and that she had made her husband fast in the stocks. She had no idea to whom to apply to undo the spring; she had to leave her beloved one and run to the village in search of a rescuer. We can scarcely, in these days, imagine the difficulties that lay in her way. Any villager she met would receive her tale with jeers instead of sympathy, and then hasten to the spot to gaze on the unhappy occupier of the place of punishment. The bride was a very pretty girl, with softest nut brown eyes, and in her white embroidered gown and straw hat with simple ribbons she must have looked little like the wife of a vagrant. I do not know how she fared in her quest of the person who kept the key of the stocks, but at last she found the right man, probably the village constable, and persuaded him to come to her aid. He tried her patience greatly as he hobbled along, grumbling at the trouble she was giving him, and at last, when she came in sight of her husband, she found some of the villagers had assembled there, delighted to see a gentleman in the stocks, and imagining, or pretending to imagine, that he had been placed there for poaching or robbing the squire's henroost, or stealing a "turmit."

Luckily there were no rotten eggs at hand to destroy the beauty of the blue coat with its large gold buttons, or the shirt front with its broad plaited frill. At length the old constable contrived to turn the cruel lock, and the victim was free.—Temple Bar.

The Life of a Salmon.

Entering rivers to spawn, going down to the sea and re-entering the rivers constitutes shortly the life history of the salmon. Speaking generally, it feeds but little in fresh water, and loses weight. In the sea it feeds ravenously and increases at a most remarkable rate. One British killed salmon has attained to 70 pounds in weight and 4½ feet in length. This fish was taken in the Tay, and a cast of it is now in the Buckland museum. Although this was a monster fish, almost without precedent, yet 40 pound salmon are not at all uncommon. In rivers the food of the salmon consists mainly of ephemeræ and their larvæ, worms, and the spawn and fry of various fresh water fishes. In the sea its food is more varied and abundant. Salmon are invariably found in the proximity of shrimp grounds, and they devour enormous quantities of sand eels. That, however, upon which they most depend for sustenance is the myriad fry of the coarser sea fish.

Salmon seem to swim in the sea in comparatively small droves, probably of from 20 to 100, and it is certain that they are much given to hugging the coast line. They stay long on banks or in channels, where favorite food is to be had, and are only driven off by receding tides. In spring and summer they do not inhabit deep water, but keep more to the banks, usually in only a few fathoms of water. At this time the sand launce is much fed upon, as is the sea urchin in its earlier stages. Huxley asserts—and his assertion stands almost alone—that the salmon's food chiefly consists of a numerous class of small creatures found in semisolid masses upon the surface of deep water; in short, that the salmon swims in a species of animal soup, in which it has merely to open its mouth and swallow what enters it.—Cornhill Magazine.

"After that," remarked the young slim who had been telling an inane ghost story, "my mind was a blank." "That accounts for it," commended a sharp young woman, and there was an interregnum of profound silence.—Truth.

POT BOILING.

From the running of the maple trough in the Spring to the boiling of the apple butter pot in the fall, and all household boiling between times, there are a thousand chances of very severe scalds and burns. In all household work, winter and summer, in great factories and in nurseries, where careless children play with matches, there is need of something to be always on hand in such emergencies, and St. Jacobs Oil fills that want to the letter. With careful attention to directions for use, there is nothing more soothing, healing and curative than this great remedy for pain. It cures promptly, and, making a new surface, leaves no scars. The pain of scalds or burns is acute and torturing, and the relief by the use of the Oil is immediate and sure.

He—So they were married at home, eh? What did you think of the service? She—Not much. It was marked 'sterling,' but I'm sure it was plate.

Nervous

People find just the help they so much need, in Hood's Sarsaparilla. It furnishes the desired strength by purifying, vitalizing and enriching the blood, and thus builds up the nerves, tones the stomach and regulates the whole system. Read this:

"I want to praise Hood's Sarsaparilla. My health run down, and I had the grip. After that, my heart and nervous system were badly affected, so that I could not do my own work. Our physician gave me some help, but did not cure. I decided to try Hood's Sarsaparilla. Soon I could do all my own housework. I have taken

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An Elixir of Life.

T. A. Slocum Offers to Send Two Bottles Free of His Remedy to Cure Consumption and all Lung Troubles.

Nothing could be fairer, more philanthropic or carry more joy in its wake than the offer of T. A. Slocum, M. C., of 183 Pearl Street, New York. Perfectly confident that he has an absolute remedy for the cure of consumption and all pulmonary complaints, he offers through this paper to send two bottles free to any reader who is suffering from lung trouble or consumption, also loss of flesh and all conditions of wasting. He invites those desirous of obtaining this remedy to send their express and post-office address, and to receive in return the two bottles free, which will arrest the approach of death. Already this remedy, by its timely use, has permanently cured thousands of cases which were given up, and death was looked upon as an early visitor.

Knowing his remedy as he does, and being so proof-positive of its beneficent results, Dr. Slocum considers it his religious duty, a duty which he owes to humanity, to donate his infallible remedy where it will assault the enemy in its citadel, and, by its inherent potency, stay the current of dissolution, bringing joy to homes over which the shadow of the grave has been gradually growing more strongly defined, causing fond hearts to grieve. The cheapness of the remedy—offered freely—apart from its inherent strength, is enough to commend it, and more so is the perfect confidence of the great chemist making the offer, who holds out life to those already becoming emaciated, and says: "Be cured."

The invitation is certainly worthy of the consideration of the afflicted, who, for years, have been taking nauseous nostrums without effect; who have ostracised themselves from home and friends to live in more salubrious climes, where the atmosphere is more congenial to weakened lungs, and who have fought against death with all the weapons and strength in their hands. There will be no mistake in sending for these free bottles—the mistake will be in passing the invitation by.

AN EASY BET TO WIN.

It Took Only a Short Time to Collect "More Than Twenty" Fools.

They stepped to the edge of the sidewalk and looked long and earnestly in the direction of the cornice of one of the big buildings. Of course under the circumstances the man who had been standing in the doorway felt impelled to join them. He could not see anything extraordinary at the top of the building, but he kept his eyes upturned because they did.

A man who was hurrying along saw the three, and he at once forgot where he was going and what he had to do, and joined them.

"I told you so," said the man who had first cast his eyes in that direction, and he made a motion as if to point out something to his companion.

Four men who were passing saw the gesture and stopped to investigate, and before they had fairly fixed their gaze upon the cornice three others joined them.

"You may be right," returned the companion of the man who had first spoken, "but you said 20, you know."

Six more people, including two women, were now straining their eyes to see what was wrong with the cornice, and a rumor was in circulation that some one had tried to throw a child out of one of the windows. This was promptly denied by the man who knows it all and who is always present on such an occasion. He said that a gang of counterfeiters had been found on the top floor and had taken refuge on the roof, where they were preparing to do battle with the officers who had been sent to arrest them.

Meanwhile the little group at the edge of the sidewalk had swelled to a crowd of over a hundred.

"Well, are you satisfied now?" asked the man who had first stopped.

"Yes," replied his companion. "There are more than 20."

"More than 20 what?" anxiously inquired several of those nearest the two.

"Fools," returned the first speaker promptly, "inspired idiots. You see, we had a dispute as to the number of fools to be seen on the streets of a great city, and I bet him we could gather 20 around us in ten minutes by simply standing out here and looking up at the cornice. Gentlemen, there are more than 20 of you here, and I win."

Then a hundred or more solemn looking men, and a few women, went on about their business, and they all felt like kicking themselves without intermission for a period of not less than two hours.—Chicago Post.

His Mistake.

The New York Recorder gives a story of a young lawyer who evidently did not consider the well-known learning of the judge a sufficient reason for omitting evidence of his own attainments.

The judge was compelled to listen to a case that had been appealed from one of the police courts. The young practitioner who appeared for the appellant was long and tedious; he brought in all of the elementary text-books, and quoted the fundamental propositions of the law.

At last the judge thought it was time to make an effort to close the argument.

"Can we not assume," he said pompously, "that the court knows a little about law itself?"

"That's the very mistake I made in the other court," answered the young orator, "and I don't want to let it defeat me twice."

Women at the Helm.

Among the curiosities of the Russian dominions is a group of communes in the government of Smolensk, surrounding the convent of Besjukow, where not only do women vote, but where they practically do all the voting and office-holding.

As the returns from agriculture are very meager in the district, and there are large towns not far away, the male inhabitants of the Besjukow neighborhood emigrate to these towns early in spring to find work, leaving few but women and children at home, and not coming home to attend to the little matter of voting.

Inasmuch as the women have to do all the farm work as well as the housework in this singular community, it does not seem strange that they rather insist upon holding the offices, and not assigning them to such old men as may be about. Futhermore, it is said that they have for a period of several years managed all the public affairs of the Besjukow district so well that the men are quite content to abandon the tedious work of government to them.

Sometimes, when the "head woman" of the joint communes is presiding over a public assembly of women to pass upon important financial and other concerns, certain of the men have been known to come home for the purpose of merely looking on and admiring the method of procedure—or else of heartily felicitating themselves upon being rid of so bothersome a duty.

When you are to blame, acknowledge it; there is nothing in blaming your own mistakes on others.

BANK PRESIDENT BEALS.

The Great Financier Found Health in Paine's Celery Compound.

Prominent among the New England men whose brains and energy have helped to make the western states rich and powerful is General David T. Beals, president of the Union National Bank of Kansas City. Successful in his many enterprises, he lives today in a fine mansion at the corner of Independence and Wabash aves.

The work and the responsibility incumbent on the president of so important a banking institution as the Union National would endanger the sturdiest health. Gen. Beals' clear-headedness and good sense were as manifest in the choice of a remedy as in his business enterprises. He strengthened his tired nervous system by the use of Paine's celery compound. Its invigorating, health-giving effects justified his expectations, and showed in his own case the remarkable power of this much-discussed remedy for thoroughly restoring and strengthening the "run-down" system.

"I found Paine's celery compound an agreeable tonic and soothing to the nerves," says General Beals.

These are the concise words of commendation characteristic of the conservative business man and the influential banker, who has learned to weigh well his words.

The scanty sunlight and the stagnant, used-up air of living rooms during the winter reduces the strength and nervous energy, especially of persons employed constantly indoors. The need—the absolute necessity—of a genuine invigorator at this spring season has impressed itself on the attention of all thinking people.

In the famous laboratory of Dartmouth Medical School, Prof. Edward E. Phelps, M. D., LL. D., discovered the formula of Paine's celery compound, a remedy that has become the standard nerve restorer, blood purifier, and strengthener from one end of the country to the other, a preparation that stands unrivalled as the medicine that makes people well.

It is a fact much commented upon that men and women of national reputation and prominence, like Gen. Beals, State Treas. Colvin of New York, Mr. Carlisle's private secretary, Mayor McShane of Montreal, Rev. Fr. Ouellet, Com. Howell, ex-Minister to Austria John M. Francis, and a host of others who are careful what they employ when sick, and have the amplest opportunities for finding out what is best, have of their own accord sent letters describing fully their permanent recovery from rheumatism, heart weakness, sleeplessness, debility, kidney troubles, and diseases of the stomach and liver. In all these cases Paine's celery compound was the one remedy that was able to completely and permanently bring back health, make poor blood again rich and pure, and regulate and build up the nervous system when weakened and deranged.

A GOLD FILLED CAVE.

OLD JOHN DONAHOE'S SECRET MINE TO BE OPENED AT LAST.

Untold Treasure Under Guard—English Capitalists and New Yorkers Cast Eyes on the Wealth—An Old Squaw Told the Secret—Maybe a New Cripple Creek.

Gold has been discovered in Putnam county, N. Y., and some of the largest capitalists in that section are said to be interested in the development of the mines.

It was several years ago that nuggets of gold were first found on the shores of Indian Lake, about a mile back from Garrison's. Silver in large quantities was also found, and at that time a multitude of prospectors were drawn to the spot. Free fights occurred when claims were being staked out, and for weeks a state of anarchy prevailed on the grounds. As in the present rush to Westchester county, the operators then had no right to take gold from the place. Mr. Donahoe, the owner of the land, called upon the authorities for protection, and the jumpers were ejected. For years afterward nothing was done to develop the mines.

Capitalists came and offered Donahoe large sums for his tract of mountainous land, but he refused to sell. It had been gossiped around the village that Donahoe knew where the principal bed of precious ore lay, but he kept his own counsel. An Indian woman had been brought up in the Donahoe family from her childhood, and she it was, the gossips said, who imparted the secret to old John Donahoe.

About five years ago the old man died, and on his deathbed he told his son where the vein was.

Several months ago the younger Donahoe decided to work the mines. He hired laborers and began in a systematic manner. He called upon Speaker Fish and explained his situation. John M. Toucey of the Hudson River railroad, Samuel Sloan of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western railroad, Assemblyman Louis F. Goodsell of Highland Falls, and a few others were also let into the secret.

The project of starting a big mining company was discussed, but the desire of the majority was to keep the matter a secret until it was certain that gold in paying quantities could be dug. In the meantime all the land in the vicinity was secured.

Donahoe still kept his men at work and soon made other discoveries. He found a cave which extended fully 500 feet into the heart of the mountain. Chambers filled with stalactites and stalagmites of unusual brilliancy made it look like an enchanted place. Lumps of silver ore weighing several pounds were found. Gurgling streams of spring water ran through the center, and on the bottom small nuggets of the precious metal were found. The walls were also studded with lumps of silver ore.

Other chambers of unknown extent branched north and south, but the lack of good air prevented the explorers from proceeding. Donahoe closed up the mouth of the cave and set his men to work drilling and digging over the spot where his father said the richest vein was concealed.

There shafts are now being sunk, and the new machinery will soon enliven the surrounding hills.

Recently half a dozen English speculators paid the place a visit and commenced making soundings. Donahoe's men warned them off, and since then they have hovered around the district. A score of New York mining operators also came prepared to jump claims. A liberal display of six shooters caused their quick departure.

Donahoe still runs the hotel at Garrison's. He is excited over his good fortune. He is a single man, not much over 30 years of age.

When Assemblyman Goodsell was asked about the mine, on his way to Albany, he was reticent and wondered how the news leaked out. He admitted having heard of the gold mines at Indian Lake, and intimated that there were also large quantities of gold in the mountain on the west shore of the Hudson. He denied owning stock in the mine, but thought it likely that the millionaires of the Garrison slope were helping Donahoe. Donahoe says that the quantity of ore so far unearthed will pay for the labor and expense incurred. He has several beautiful specimens of ore in his office.—New York World.

A FLOATING CHAPEL.

Business and Religion Adrift In an Ohio River Boat.

A novel floating chapel boat, for the double purpose of preaching the gospel and transacting business, has just been fitted out at Kuttawa, a station on the Ohio valley railroad and Cumberland river, north of Hopkinsville, Ky., and will make evangelizing voyages along the Cumberland and Ohio rivers between Cairo, Ills., and Nashville.

The vessel is being run by Rev. William Marshall, a minister, who was for years a commercial traveler. He will keep his family with him and pay his expenses by selling goods and preaching the gospel along his route of travel.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

The Great Lawyer and Silver-Tongued Prince of Agnostics.

That was a strange spectacle which was presented in Chicago on a recent Sunday, when Robert G. Ingersoll, who for more than a score of years has consecrated the flower of his surpassing eloquence to ridicule, satirization and denunciation of preachers and churches and the Bible, spoke from a Christian pulpit, at the invitation of a preacher and of a church, to 3,000 followers of the Christian banner. For once the animosities engendered by bitter words were laid aside. The great audience bowed its head in silent sympathy with an orthodox Christian invocation to God and petition for the blessing of Christ; then listened for two hours to the eloquent denier of all that is called supernatural or divine, of all that is unknowable, except by faith, in religion. And Ingersoll was as magnanimous as his audience. Not once did he utter a word to wound the sensibilities of his hearers. Orator and auditors met on the common ground of considering what can be done and should be done to uplift humanity. That was his theme; on that he dwelt. There was no scoffing at religion, no jeering at simple faith, and when the logic of the speaker's thought roused an echo in the hearts of his hearers, they gave him generous meed of applause. These burst of approval were anything but infrequent. The audience of Christians heard from the infidel thoughts both old and new, but all clothed in beautiful language. The address was given in the place of worship of the Church Militant, of which Dr. John Rusk is pastor.

ROBT. G. INGERSOLL.

Ingersoll, the silver-tongued prince of agnostics and greatest of orators, was born in Dresden, N. Y., Aug. 11, 1833. His father was a Congregational preacher, of such liberal views that he was persecuted for them, and in his early life Robert G. Ingersoll imbibed an intense hatred of Calvinism which grew with his growth and finally made him the enemy of all forms of religion. His boyhood was spent in Wisconsin and Illinois and at the age of 24 he took up the practice of law at Peoria, Ill. During the war he was colonel of the Eleventh Illinois Cavalry and after the war his ability as an orator and Republican campaign speaker gave him a reputation in the West, which was made national by his famous "plumed-knight speech" in the Republican National Convention of 1876, by which he placed James G. Blaine in nomination. Since that time he has lived in Washington and New York. He has been connected with the most famous modern law cases, for his legal ability is extraordinary. His lectures and law practice have made him wealthy.

FATIMA II. BORN.

A Water Baby that Some Time Will Weigh Tons

A baby hippopotamus is a new arrival at the menagerie in Central Park, New York. "Mrs. Fatima," the mother, weighs 4,465 pounds, and cherishes her baby as much as a human mother does. Fatima II., judging from the noise that she makes, is composed of nothing but lungs. During the first day the babe kept up a howl that would have drowned out the roar of Niagara Falls. The first thing baby did was to get out of the water. It looked like a new-born calf, and it walked like a seal.

While baby was wabbling around, Grandma Murphy—who has been with Fatima all through her illness, and had been forcibly ejected by the aid of three battering rams, peeped through a crack from the adjoining cage, and, thinking her grandchild was getting gay, she roared high disapproval.

But Fatima the second wasn't feazed. She was having lots of fun finding out what her legs were made for. From the way she used them she probably thought they were wings.

When mamma started to shove baby back into the tank baby went for mamma. That settled it. Mamma rolled over, squeezed herself together until she did not take up much more room than an ordinary house and pretended to be asleep and out of sight.

THE BABY HIPPOPOTAMUS.

New Woman in China.

The new woman has arisen in China. At Shuntun the daughter of a magistrate acts as his treasurer, and the district is startled at the fact that he has made 50,000 taels since she began to "finance" his affairs, six months ago.

There is, after all, but one reliable way to increase your income, and that is to reduce your expenses.

FUN WHILE WAITING.

A MYSTERIOUS FAT GERMAN IN A NEW YORK FERRYHOUSE.

He Seemed to Be Sleepy, Yet He Provided Entertainment For Those Present Until the Boat Arrived, and Then He Went Aboard and Disappeared.

He was a fat German. He looked as if he might be a prosperous saloon keeper. He signalized his entrance into the Cortlandt Street ferry house by a series of loud meows which sounded so natural that the half hundred people who were waiting for the boat looked around for the cats. The fat man was under the weather. He strolled over to the steam radiator in the center of the room, and in a couple of minutes voices were heard. First they were in the northeast corner of the room up near the ceiling. Some one up there seemed to be carrying on an animated conversation with himself. It was plain that the some one was a German.

"Chakey," said the voice, "vod your vife vill say do you alretty, ha? You voz one tam fool k'vick yet."

The women in the ferryhouse began to look nervous. They gazed at the ceiling at the spot from where the voice seemed to come. The men were looking there too. The fat German stood by the radiator, his head over his breast, and seemed to be sound asleep.

"Fire! Fire! Fire!" cried a voice in the southwest corner.

Everybody jumped up. The women grabbed the arms of their escorts. The fat German still slept, and the voice sounded again, this time seemingly from the platform of an automatic weighing machine.

"Chakey, you vos a prute! Vod for you vand der ladies do sgare vod? I bunch your nose alretty."

This was somewhat reassuring. Everybody seemed to realize at the same instant that there was a ventriloquist with a big range of voice around somewhere, and everybody looked at the German. He seemed still to be asleep. But in a moment he moved uneasily. Then he lifted the ragged stump of a cigar he had in his hand, opened his eyes sleepily and put the stump into his mouth. Some fire was left in the cigar stump, but he didn't seem to notice it. He munched on the butt as if it were a sweet morsel. Everybody was watching him. He chewed perhaps a minute. Then he swallowed the stump, and the next instant pulled a new cigar out of his ear, bit off the end and lighted it.

"I no puy cigars," he said. "I maig dem."

The crowd was mightily interested and gathered closer around. He didn't seem to like that, and he snorted:

"Vod you think, you vools beeble? Gauze I make a cigar you dink I vos a vool. I unmake one." Saying which he put the fresh cigar, lighted as it was, back into his ear. He seemed to shove it out of sight and calmly took from his other ear the ragged butt that he had but a moment before chewed up and swallowed. He pulled on it. It was still lighted. One of his eyelids began twitching.

"My lug vos gone," he said. "I haff nails in my head ven vools loog ad me."

With the tips of his fingers he lifted the twitching lid and pulled out a five inch iron spike, like those used to fasten down steel rails.

"I vos durn do one beice off iron alretty if you beobles dond ka'vit," he snorted, and he pulled another spike from the other eye. At the same instant the ragged butt disappeared, and in its place was another fresh cigar. He lit that. Next he pulled a couple of yards of muslin out of his mouth and wiped his eyes, after which he put back the spikes. He seemed to drive them right into the ball of either eye. The women were shocked and turned away. He pulled a whisky glass from his pocket, bit pieces out of it and chewed them with relish.

"Chentlemens," he said, "I voz 'ungry. Cand you hellub me?"

"Thought it was a fake like that," said two or three of the men in the crowd.

"Well, it's a cold day when he gets any of my money," said two or three others.

"Money?" growled the fat German. "You dink I am lige you vool beobles vod ead mead nid. I voz nod. I ead baber; dod voz cheaber. Vill semepoddy helb a boor man do a biece off baber? Ziff me dod," he said, snatching an evening paper from the hands of one of the men. He tore two pages from it, and beginning on the corner of one he stuffed it into his mouth and ate it. At least it disappeared. Then he tackled the other page, and that went.

"Poor man," said one sympathetic woman, "he must be hungry. But how can he eat that stuff?"

The second page was gone, all but a little corner. The fat German's cheek bulged. A voice over his head said:

"Chakey, you've god doo much; you voz a hog."

He seized the corner of the paper that was sticking out and began pulling at it. It came in the shape of a perfect cone, alternately red, white and blue in color. He held his head back and pulled. Still the colored cone kept coming. It ended at about the second yard. He handled it tenderly a moment, juggled it around, and finally turning it point down stuck it down his throat. Down and down it went, until it was out of sight. He closed his mouth. The cigar all this time had been missing. It appeared now, still lighted.

The coming in of the boat stopped the fun. The fat German was the first man aboard. He sank into a corner in the men's cabin and in two minutes was snoring. Who he was or what became of him nobody on the boat knew. He went out upon the rear deck when the boat was half way to Jersey City and disappeared.—New York Sun.

GUIDES TRAINS IN SAFETY.

A Young Woman of Kansas With Important Matters on Hand.

Miss Byrd Watkins of Topeka has the distinction of being the only woman train dispatcher, on a single track, in the United States, and the responsibility of such a position attaches no little importance to the young woman who holds it.

Miss Watkins is stationed at Junction City, on the Kansas division of the Union Pacific railway, a through line from Kansas City to Denver and its branches, the Junction City and Fort Kearney branch, from Junction City to Concordia and Belleville; the Solomon City branch, from Solomon City to Beloit, and the Salina and southwestern branch, from Salina to McPherson.

Miss Watkins is one of the three "shifts" working eight hours each, and is on the second "trick," as the time between 4 o'clock in the afternoon and midnight is called. She is in full charge of the office during that time. Her duties as dispatcher on a single track differ materially from those of a double track dispatcher, as meeting points must be made for all trains going in opposite directions.

MISS BYRD WATKINS.

She is a Kentuckian by birth. Her father, who was a lawyer, died 14 years ago, leaving a wife and three daughters, of whom Miss Byrd is the eldest. She is just past 23, and her progress in the line of work she has chosen has been rapid. Her first situation was that of operator for the Union Pacific at Deer Trail, Colo. From that place she went to Topeka and was employed by the same railroad there for four years, until October, 1894, when she was promoted to Junction City as train dispatcher.

Few women have the clear head and steady nerve required to fill such a position. Miss Watkins is a nice looking girl, with a tall, slender figure, and has blue eyes and light brown hair. Her manner is pleasing and refined.

"When I first went into the office," she said, "the superintendent remarked that I should be accomplishing a great deal if I learned to be a train dispatcher without swearing. I must confess that I have more sympathy with men on that score, but when I feel obliged to find an outlet for my feelings I just get up and walk round and round the table. I have had no accidents since I began—not even a narrow escape."

Miss Watkins is said to be the youngest dispatcher on the road. The Southwest Railway Record publishes a paragraph complimentary to the young lady, and an official of the road is quoted as saying, "I would not give her up for any man dispatcher on our system."—Kansas City Star.

Don't Use Slang.

Bishop Potter's word at the Vassar Alumnæ association, at its luncheon recently, deserves accentuation. His talk dealt with the abuses and claims of our mother tongue. "Slang," said he, among other things, "is one of the greatest dangers to which our tongue is subjected. Just as a coin is debased, so is a language, and in this connection I will say that the dialect story, with all of its tenderness and pathos, is of doubtful value." He urged upon his hearers the necessity to avoid the danger of which he felt sure every woman present was conscious, "that of giving vigor to expression by the aid of slang." He spoke, too, of the risky stimulant to the use of slang among young women from the fact that such words on their lips create a laugh among men. "Believe me," closed the bishop earnestly, "that on the testimony of young men themselves you can wear no charm greater than that of reserved, cultivated, choice speech. Use your eye, your mind, your lip, to lift up the great tongue, Shakespeare's tongue, which we all inherit."

Mrs. Blinn's Idea.

A reception was given recently to Mrs. Nellie Holbrook Blinn of California at the equal suffrage headquarters, Portland, Or. Mrs. Blinn said that all the political parties of her state except the Democratic had indorsed the pending woman suffrage amendment by resolutions or planks in their platforms. Mrs. Blinn thought that the accumulation of vast rolls of suffrage petitions had better be discontinued. She said the work of securing them was expensive and burdensome, and no attention was paid to them. What is needed is to educate men into the understanding that suffrage for women will benefit men as well as women, and then their opposition will cease.

Lady Wilde's Masterpiece.

The recent death of Lady Wilde of London recalls the fact, says a London paper, that it was she who wrote the famous leading article, headed "Jacta Alea Est," in the Dublin Nation, which constituted the chief count in the crown indictment for high treason against the editor of that journal, who is now Sir Charles Gavan Duffy, an octogenarian literary recluse at Nice. The article in question was published at the height of the revolutionary fever in 1848. As a sample of blood stirring English prose it still retains its place in a number of collections, and especially those issued on the other side of the Atlantic.

JAPANESE FENCING.

SKILLFUL WORK WITH FOILS MADE OF SPLIT BAMBOO.

An Encounter Witnessed In the Sunrise Singlestick Club of Honolulu—Surprising Quickness and Skill In Attacking and Defending.

If you are ever asked to engage in a duel with a Japanese, being the challenged party, select any implement rather than the singlestick, for unless you are proficient in thrusts and parries you will be "done up" in short order.

In feudal times every ablebodied Japanese was obliged to become an expert swordsman, so that in the event of war he could go to the front and do his share of fighting. But with the improvement in the methods of warfare, which the Japanese were quick to adopt, the short sword has been relegated to the back yard and the shop of the bric-a-brac dealer, and fencing is merely a pastime known as gek ken. In the civil war in Japan, 18 years ago, however, there were certain companies of guards, armed with swords, who did some very effective and bloody work with them.

There is a club in Honolulu, with headquarters on Maunakea street, whose members have an instructor in the use of the singlestick. The organization is solely for amusement, rather than for business, though there is probably a desire on the part of the leaders to perpetuate the old fashioned methods of their forefathers in quelling rebellions. Just now this club, the Sunrise, is without an instructor, so that there is but little practice and no exhibitions.

The headquarters of the Sunrise Singlestick club is on the lower floor of the building occupied by the Japanese newspaper of the same name. Through the kindness of Editor Satto, and Hiraoka, business manager of the paper, a reporter was given an opportunity to witness an exhibition between Yajimai and Karikawa, two expert handlers of the sticks.

By the way of introduction the combatants removed their kimonas and donned loose skirts and a helmet with strong iron bars across the face. Then they sheathed their bodies with stiff bamboo breastplates. Heavily padded gloves with gauntlets finished the costume. The "short sticks" are about five feet long, and are made of several pieces of bamboo fastened together. There seemed to be no call of "time" by a referee. The men stepped to the center of the room and saluted each other by a motion of the arm, and then one uttered a guttural sound signifying his unwillingness to begin the fray and they crossed sticks, the point of each being held on a level with the neck and the handle grasped with both hands. Yajimai led, and throughout the bout was acting on the offensive, while Karikawa braced himself so as to resist and ward off any blow that might be directed toward him. Once he was thoughtless. Yajimai gave him a crack on the helmet that resounded through the room. All the time the men were fencing they were shouting as if warning each other to look out for what might be coming.

To the stranger who is not familiar with the rules there seemed to be no rest for the men. If one should receive a blow which under ordinary circumstances would warrant his going down for a few seconds, long enough to recover, it must simply end with the desire, and his next move will be to get back at his opponent. In this exhibition Karikawa, who was rather more stockily built than his foe, had the best of the first of the fight, but the end was a draw, and the men retired windless and with the perspiration pouring from their faces.

The wrist seemed to be the part of the anatomy oftenest aimed at, and while that part of the arm is protected by a padded gauntlet the humerus is bare, and a strong blow means a heavy welt and a sore arm. At the end of the contest spoken of, here Yajimai carried a mark which was quite blue. If a blow on the wrist is severe enough, it will disable a fencer, and the fight ends, and if it cannot be accomplished in that way a fencer will raise his stick high above and inclined toward the back of his head, very much after the style of ancient executioners in the chopping block process, and bring it down with all his strength on his rival's head—if he can. Celerity marks every movement of the fencer, so that the observer's eye is taxed to its utmost to keep track of the men.

Singlestick fencing among the Japanese is so different from anything attempted by the white people that it is difficult to make comparisons or draw conclusions. If quickness in an attack or parry is the secret of the game, Yajimai and Karikawa should be entitled to positions as experts. Their endurance, too, is remarkable, considering the thickness of the clothing worn. Swathed as they are in heavily padded suits, evidently much depends upon the eye, and it is when one of the fencers catches the eye of his opponent off his guard that he attempts a blow, but to ascertain when the eye is not attending to its business is much too difficult for a stranger to solve, shielded as the fencer's face is with iron bars set closely together.

There are four points in a match with singlesticks between Japanese—a blow on the back of head, a fair one, for glancing strokes do not count; a thrust at the throat, a stroke on the wrist and a stroke on the side. There is no rule as to the position a fencer must occupy in delivering any one of these blows—it may be from either side and from one or both hands. If it is a "chopper," it is apt to be one that will make the man receiving it wince, even though he be protected by all sorts of grotesque contrivances.—Pacific Commercial Advertiser.

Rare Enough.

Landlady—Do you like your steak rare, Mr. Boardlong?

Mr. B.—No rarer than it is, madam.—Detroit Free Press.

Those Dear Cows.

From first to last, Arnold must have published between 20 and 30 volumes, and as we are told that writing did not come easily to him it is clear that Mr. Morley's description of him as one of the most occupied men of his time is not exaggerated. His correspondence therefore was confined almost wholly to his own family, and is naturally filled with such personal matters as they would be most concerned to know. The fireside concerns of his daily existence—his children, his pets, his health, his garden, the places he visited, the dinners he ate, and the people in whose company he ate them.

The bulk of these letters were written to his mother, and news of his children naturally plays a large part in them. "They go everywhere with me that I will take them, and their talk is delightful. We passed a yard the other day where there were cows, and N. said: 'What a nice smell from those dear cows, papa! Isn't it kind of the dear cows to give us smells?'" One can imagine with what pleasure the grandmother would read such instances of the little one's quickness and sympathy. One can imagine with what pleasure the father would write them. But alien eyes, bent possibly upon their own children and their own cows, may be pardoned for reading unmoved such essentially familiar and domestic records. There is a saying: "Never tell your troubles. You only take up the time of the man who is waiting to tell you his." In this hard and busy world the saying perhaps holds good of other things than troubles. — Macmillan's Magazine.

New York as a Literary Mart.

Edward W. Bok, in The Ladies' Home Journal, writes of "The American Literary Center," and presents the claims of New York and Boston (between which cities it may be inferred he believes it rests) for the distinction. He summarizes New York in this way: "New York undoubtedly offers the largest market for literature of any city in America. This is naturally so, as must always follow in the case of the largest and wealthiest city of any country. The Empire City controls the largest number of publishing houses, even though it cannot claim all the principal ones. It has a larger number of magazines and periodicals of all kinds than any other city, even though it is deprived the right to the first and foremost of all American literary periodicals, the leading eclectic magazine of the world or of the most widely circulated channels of serial literature. But, unquestionably, it has the majority, and a powerful majority it is. It has libraries galore, one might almost say, yet the two principal libraries of the country are in other cities. Its list of authors, resident of the city or near it, is long and representative, embracing some of the most gifted pens which make contemporaneous American literature. If all our best writings do not emanate from its immense places of output, a goodly portion undeniably do."

Poor Louisa's Sore Throat.

A teacher in a national school who had been much annoyed by truancy, says London Answers, has recently been stringent in enforcing the rule that her scholars, on their return to school after an absence, must bring her a note stating in full the cause of such absence, the note to be in the writing of a parent or guardian. The following is a note brought by one of her pupils after two weeks' absence:

"Louisa was absent monday, please excuse her.

"Louisa was absent toosday, she had a sore throte.

"Louisa was absent wensday, she had a sore throte.

"Louisa was absent thursday, she had a sore throte.

"Louisa was absent friday, she had a sore throte.

"Read this over again for the next week."

Beauties of "the Code" Illustrated.

Two young Russian officers attached to the Orsk infantry regiment recently quarreled over their cups in a cafe chantant at Orenburg, and one of them struck the other across the cheek with his open hand. The subalterns were intimate comrades, and the aggressor made an ample and satisfactory apology when he came to his senses. This was cordially accepted by his friend, but the regimental court of honor decreed that the officers should fight, and a duel was arranged with pistols at 20 paces. The young lieutenant who had received the affront and forgiven his friend was hit in the thigh and crippled, and consequently is unfitted for further service.—London News.

Something For Nothing.

"It is astonishing," said an observant woman not long ago, "how much some people will give if they think they are getting something for nothing. Now I teach my children constantly that anything of value can never be had for nothing. There is such a thing as luck, and there are bargains, but in the end you will find that such luck never comes to those who are always on the lookout for it, and that bargains are obtained only by those who know what to buy, where to buy and how to buy."

Perseverance is surely the keystone of luck,
And fortune will favor the one who has pluck.

—Brooklyn Eagle.

Applying the Proverb.

The Louisville Courier-Journal tells of an extremely religious man who lives on Lost creek in Greenup county. He is a close student of his Bible, and doesn't propose to live on Lost creek in the next world if he can help it. A few nights ago he was searching the Scriptures and ran across the admonition of Solomon, "Spare the rod and spoil the child." After studying the matter over he concluded that the rod had not been applied often enough to his own family of seven hopefuls, and he yanked the entire seven out of bed and administered a sound whipping to very one of them.

He got well, and there was a black ring around him the rest of his life, one of the prettiest things you ever saw.

"We couldn't find any dead Indians to speak of after the fight, and we wondered what we had done. One of the scouts went out and came back and said, 'Heap Injun dead.' We didn't find any marks of it, but he showed us where there were bodies cached by the hundreds. You know an Indian will bury his dead if he has to take all kinds of chances to do it. There were over 100 bodies in one hole we found on the side of the bank of the river.

"Old Chief Joseph was a man to remember. There was never a general who was more brave than he was. He was a match for some of the best of them. When he was at the head, there was no such thing as one soldier being good for eight or ten Indians, as you hear people say.

"General Gibbon was a mighty fine man. I don't expect to meet a better one. He was as brave as they make them, and he was always as good to his men as a father would have been. There will be many a man who still lives in this country who will be sorry that Gibbon is dead."—Helena Independent.

Two deaths are reported from the southern end of the County this week. They are John Daley at Darwin and the infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. St Merry at Keeler.

Accidently Shot.

Clifford Baxter and Arthur Shepherd left San Francisco last Tuesday, to come home and spend their vacation, intending to come by way of the Kearsarge pass. And accordingly B. F. Claussen and Lester Laird left town last Wednesday morning to meet them on the other side of the summit. When about noon, they were within a half hour's ride of the summit both dismounted to lead their horses across a snow bank. Lester had a large 44 caliber revolver buckled around his waist, and in his movements while walking, the revolver came unfastened and fell to the ground, the hammer struck a rock, which caused it to explode The ball passed through the leather holster in which it was carried and entered the left leg just above the knee cap and lodged about five inches above the knee and a little more than an inch from the surface. The wound was bound up and Lester walked a short distance then rode back to town. When Drs. Blair and McCrellin removed the bullet it was found to be slightly flattened on one side. Lester expects to be around again within a couple of weeks.

Eight Hour Law.

The eight-hour Utah mining law went into effect in that State yesterday. It makes it a misdemeanor for a mine owner or smelter to permit any employe to work longer than eight hours a day. The practical workings of the new statute is of interest to the miners there. Manager O. B. Hardy of the Bingham Copper Company says: "There are miners whom I know who can do as much work in eight hours as in ten, and there are hands who could not do the work of a miner's day if you allowed them twelve hours. The way I feel about it is that if a miner can do his work in eight hours, let him do it. If, on the other hand, a man cannot do it in that time, let the foreman fire him and employ one who can." A Salt Lake attorney says there is nothing in the law to prevent a miner dictating his own hours and working as many in excess of the statutory provisions as he liked. This may enable the miner and mine owner to arrive at harmonious conclusions.—Scientific Press.

Mark Twain on Prohibition.

Mark twain has just concluded a lecturing tour in New Zealand. He said good-bye to the New Zealanders at Christ's Church, and in the course of his speech made reference to prohibition which he said he approved, but which would put them into most difficult straits. He then told the following story: "In our country several years ago, there was a man came into a prohibition town, and, unlike you savages here, they said to him: 'You can't get a drink anywhere except at the apothecarie's.' So he went to the apothecary, who said: 'You can't get a drink here without a prescription from the physician.' But the man said: 'I an perishing. I haven't time to get a prescription.' The apothecary replied: 'Well I haven't power to give you a drink except for snake bite.' The man said: 'Where's the snake?' So the apothecary gave him the snake's address and he went off. Soon after, however, he came back and said: 'For goodness' sake, give me a drink. That snake is engaged for six months ahead."

Church Entertainment.

The entertainment was a success all around. The evening was fine and the house was well filled. The programme, consisting of well selected songs and recitations, entertained the audience for over an hour, and when ice-cream, cake and strawberries were announced, a liberal response was made and everything was sold in short order. The total receipts were $31.35, which, after a few dollars for expenses will leave a clear profit of over $25, which was all that was expected Too much praise cannot be given the young ladies and the com who worked so hard to make these entertainments a success. For it takes time and patience to prepare the number of small children for these concerts, and shows the good that we may do for others.

FRANK FITZGERALD, Chairman.

Attest: D. J, HESSION, Clerk.

The Picnicers.

MR. EDITOR—Herewith, I send you an account of the delightful time which was enjoyed by the young folks, on Town Creek several days ago.

We all had a grand time and 'Moore' fun than you can imagine. We had a 'Cook' along and plenty of 'Laird' to fry the speckled beauties that were hooked from the sparkling stream. It seemed cruel to take the hook out of the fish's mouth, more particularly when fastened in the trout's 'Gill.' If the 'Laird' had given out we had 'Moffett' to replenish the larder with. We had a 'Net' along with us, but as the law prohibits the catching of trout except with hook and line, and as there were no suckers, carp or catfish, it was not cast. If it had been no doubt it would have been over burdened; as it was, there wan't 'Annie' use for it as a fishing tackle. We lounged in the shade of the lofty pines and spreading oaks, where the ferns, green grass and wild flowers were lovely and in profusion along the water edge Particularly the wild 'Rose' was somewhat of a favorite, and as all combined sent their fragrance, wafted by a summer breeze, it was simply enchancement. The 'young buds' in all their varied stages and conditions gave variety to the scene, and as the melodius voices mingled with the restless lustling leaves, gurgling water and chirping birds, when they sang 'Annie Rooney,' 'Little Maud' and 'Effie the Pride of My Heart,' it was like A O 'Leon' music. Conversation formed a good part of our program, a great many questions being asked and answers given, but I cannot say whether everybody was in 'Earnest' or not. Some whispered softly 'Lester' might be overheard. Some made their 'Marks' by being successful in fishing. Others whiled away their time in other pastimes. There was only one 'Miner'—barring those under age—and with him we prospectd the beautiful sands on the banks of the stream where we having so much fun and recreation. Some remarked that they were already down to 'bed-rock' and hadn't a 'color.' Taking the advice of the only expert, we abandoned the search. As the great illuminator passed behind the lofty peaks of the rugged Sierras, the 'Marshal' of the day ordered us to vacate the cool and pleasant 'Wood' for our homes. One fellow 'Sadie' never enjoyed himself so much before When I'm 'Malone' the thoughts of the occasion will always be uppermost in my mind, and I can only hope to repeat the good time frequently. In coming home there was many a 'jolt' taken which we will long remember. Not the 'jolts' we get from bottles and barrels—for I don't believe there was any liquor in the crowd, except some some 'Holland' gin—but regular jolts over granite boulders. While there was no visible stimulants, there was plenty to eat, and such nice cake, pie, chicken etcetra. I believe if rightly informed, the best chicken came from a 'Henry' out at the Fort.

Oh! can't we have another pic,
Ni' at the same place on the creek,
To eat the chicken, pie and cake
That willing hearts and hand can make?

ONE OF THEM.

School Elections.

Considerable interest was manifest at the school election last Friday. There being a total of 47 votes cast, which were distributed as follows:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| E. Robinson | 17 | H. Fehrman | 16 |
| L. Wood | 7 | Mrs Nettie Webb | 3 |
| W. F. Matlack | 3 | John A. Lank | 1 |

At Milton district there were ten votes cast and J. S. Gorman, H. D. Gill and B. Aguirre were chosen trustees.

Stray No ice.

Pasevitch, the photographer will be again in Inyo county, and stop in each town, one week in each place. As usual, he will give you same offer—one large picture with the dozen. Special price on enlarged pictures in crayon, $5 per picture, in a handsome frame, and a fine class of work. Usually you pay from $8 to $10. *

P. W. Palmer of Chicago has purchased the old Mammoth mines and will push rapidly the work of development. There is a ten stamp mill now in operation and if the first cleanup proves that the ores can be successfulv handled by this method, the works will be extended. Mr Palmer arrived at Bishop on Wednesday from a trip to San Francisco.

A brother of Mr. E. Chenot is expected to arrive from Belgium within a couple of weeks to remain here. Mr. Wm. Muth-Rasmussen is also expecting a sister who will arrive from Denmark the latter part of next month.

Judge Virden and wife arrived from Bridgeport yesterday afternoon, having drove through with private conveyance. A short session of court was held yesterday afternoon, and the Jenkin's case was called this morning.

Richard Kirman, a leading citizen of Nevada, who was interested in the cattle business with T. B. Rickey, died in San Francisco on the 29th of last month. He leaves a wife and son and an estate valued at $1,000,000.

Since the coronation ceremonies of the Czar of Russia cost something like $32,000,000, it is quite probable that the wish that the Czar's life might be long was inspired by more than patriotism only.

H. McCarroll received several bruises and scratches by falling from a race horse he was training at Blackrock one day this week.

Miss Moore, a dressmaker arrived from Big Pine last Tuesday and will remain in town a few days.

Bishop is making active preperations for celebrating the coming Fourth.

A. W. Eibeshutz will start for the city in a day or two.

PRESIDENT ELLIOTT AIMS TO INCREASE MEMBERSHIP TO 60,000.

His Election Was Popular—Likely Now That Professional Riders Will Have Greater Opportunities—Dissatisfaction Because of Reduced Value of Prizes.

The affairs of the League of American Wheelmen, guided by new officers, will be conducted on broad and radical lines this year. The election of Sterling Elliott of Massachusetts to the presidency gives universal satisfaction, and while from some sections opposition developed against his election there is a feeling that his administration will be active and progressive.

As a result of the changes made in the constitution of the league, the affairs of the organization will be carried on in a more conservative way this season.

This fact will be particularly noticeable in racing matters The action of the national assembly in abolishing classes A and B and substituting in their stead purely amateur and professional departments, while anything but satisfactory to the old class B racing men, can have but one result, and that will be an increase in the professional ranks. While the assembly had no hesitancy in reinstating all the class B men to the amateur ranks the amateur riders feel that this move was unjust, and that the league legislators could more properly have transferred the men in this class to the professional ranks, where it has been admitted they justly belong.

PRESIDENT ELLIOTT.

Racing men who have been racing for prizes valued at $150, with the privilege of traveling to meets wherever they chose and having their expenses paid, will naturally demur at the changed condition of affairs and refuse to ride for prizes reduced to $35.

Their riding district is now limited to 100 miles, and they are unable to either receive salaries or accept expenses, and, accordingly, the noted riders in class B last year will ride for cash prizes this year.

The action of the L. A. W. in reducing the prize value for amateurs from $50 to $35 has been criticised adversely. The league aims to promote and foster a purely amateur class, and racing folk maintain that this fact alone should induce some liberality in dealing with the amateur class.

The racing men who were rated as second and third class men last year are rejoiced over their admission to the amateur ranks, as they now see a chance of prize winning.

It seems likely that Charley M. Murphy and Eddie Bald will go abroad this year to do some racing early in the season. These riders, with other class B men, have taken up bicycle racing as a means of livelihood, and must race for cash; so that unless some professional events with liberal purses materialize this year, it is likely that a big batch of class B riders will go abroad. The manufacturers who have supported teams in this country in the past are disposed to send racing men abroad to race as professionals, but seem reluctant to engage them for that purpose in this country.

The race meet promoters throughout the country, who have catered to class B racing men and local class A men in the past, will now be compelled, for the purpose of holding their meets, to substitute professional events, and they can, instead of offering diamond prizes, as was the custom last year, award cash to the same value.

The change in the racing conditions demands a greater recognition of the professional rider by the League of American Wheelmen. These riders have received scant attention from the league, but under the existing condition of affairs professional events will likely attain the prominence of class B, and all the league clubs will, as a result, promote such events.

President Elliott announces that before he selects any of his committees he intends to consult the various chief consuls throughout the country in relation to choosing the most desirable men for the position. Mr. Elliott's plan is to secure committeemen who will make their respective departments as prominent as the racing department.

The selection of a chairman of the racing board this year is exciting considerable interest. George D. Gideon of Philadelphia, who had charge of the racing interests last year, and who managed the racing affairs in so satisfactory a manner, is considered the best fitted man for the office, but it is a well known fact that Gideon voted and worked to elect A. C. Willison president, and accordingly there is a feeling that President Elliott may overlook him on this account.

Henry Robinson of Massachusetts, a member of the national racing board and chairman of his state racing board, supported Elliott, and is talked of as a likely man to succeed Gideon.

For the best interest of racing it is conceded on all sides that the wisest selection for the chairmanship of the racing board will be the reappointment of Gideon.

President Elliott is convinced that the numerical strength of the league is not what it should be, considering the great number of wheelmen in this country at the present time, and he intends to use every effort to place the membership at 60,000 before the next annual meeting of the national assembly.

The chief consuls throughout the different divisions will be advised of President Elliott's plan on the subject in order to work accordingly.

The conference held between President Coleman of the cycle board of trade and President Elliott of the League of American Wheelmen indicates that the latter is determined to take immediate steps to seek a closer co-operation between these two bodies, which he says he feels will be beneficial to the best interests of cycling.

Road improvement, increased membership and the protection of wheelmen's rights will be President Elliott's chief objects this year. He is planning to inaugurate a more aggressive policy in every division, so that the work of the organization will be carried on on a more uniform system, that will bear greater results than have ever been obtained before.—New York World.

A PLUCKY WOMAN.

Mrs. Willis Will Establish a Bakery In Circle City.

Mrs. Willis of Tacoma, the first white woman to attempt a journey through the wildest and most dangerous part of Alaska, left the other day on the steamer Willapa for Circle City, situated on Yukon river, just inside the arctic rim.

She made the journey last year and found an admirable opening for a bakery, and returned for the necessary supplies. She takes two sleds, heavily loaded, which will be hauled over the snow a thousand miles by dogs. With her own hands she will fell trees and build two canoes in which to cross Lake Linderman and go down two rivers to Circle City. River navigation is exceedingly dangerous, and in several places it is necessary to carry the canoes around high waterfalls. Speaking of the venture she said:

"Yes, it is quite an undertaking, but there is no real danger. Hundreds of weak men successfully accomplished the same journey. All it requires is pluck, energy and plenty of nerve. Dogs afford me ample protection from wild animals. I see no reason why a woman should not brave the perils of a short journey like this to make a 'stake.'

"My husband is an invalid, and the opportunity for the establishment of a bakery at Circle City is good. Any honest, persevering woman can engage in a profitable and respectable business there and return in a few years with thousands of dollars."

A NARROW ESCAPE.

How Ex-Senator Spooner of Wisconsin Squashed His Presidential Boom.

Ex-Senator Spooner of Wisconsin narrowly escaped becoming a presidential possibility recently. He was in the east on political business and was at the Waldorf hotel, New York. While he was absent a plan was quietly hatched up to present his name at the St. Louis convention, with the solid Wisconsin delegation behind it, and to try to get votes outside. Mr. Spooner was in blissful ignorance of the scheme.

The news reached him, and he suddenly started west. Now it is said that he effectually quashed his own boom. Some of the Wisconsin leaders seemed bent on dragging him forth as a favorite son, and Mr. Spooner said that he had no desire to be a stool pigeon or decoy duck for some other candidate. He explained simply to his friends that his only ambition was to succeed Vilas in the senate. He was assured of a hearty support in this ambition, and his "boom" has been side tracked.—New York Tribune.

Rural Italian Peasants.

We have been seeing the agricultural side of this people's life in quiet, little known valleys of northern Italy, and more and more have they impressed us by their industry and amiability. For friendliness perhaps they have no equals except the Irish peasantry, and for indefatigable labor of the most arduous and detailed and menial kind surely they cannot be surpassed. Every available foot of land, sometimes reclaimed from the barren rock, sometimes, as here, lying along the river bank in flats drained by little canals cut deep in the soil, bears witness, in its perfect neatness of cultivation, to the patient labor of this people. Women were to be seen every day in the Val Molenco, not far from Bormio, carrying on their backs huge baskets of manure for fields hundreds of feet above the valleys, up steep zigzag paths. Every few yards a rest is necessary, and the weight is temporarily removed by resting the baskets upon the low stone walls, against which the tired bearers themselves lean. Thus they gradually, but always cheerfully, get their burdens up the mountain sides. In other places, these baskets may be seen full of earth, which is to cover some rocky plateau a few yards square, and make it ready for planting, in the south with olive or fruit trees in the north with flax or grass.—New York Post.

How Long Cut Flowers Last.

The thin stemmed roses are the most perishable of all flowers. To this class belong the Bridesmaid (pink), Mermet (very delicate pink), the Bride (white) and the Perle (yellow). Even with care they will seldom retain their beauty over the second day. The Cusine (delicate pink) and Mrs. Pierpont Morgan roses are more enduring and will often keep three and even four days. The American Beauty will last three and four days, but after the second day changes color, the rich red assuming a purplish hue.

Violets will often retain an appearance of freshness for four and five days, but after the second day all perfume is gone. Hyacinths and fresia look well for three or four days, and sometimes even longer, while mignonette and carnations can, with a little care, be kept for almost a week. Daffodils have even greater staying powers and have been known to look fresh at the advanced age of eight and nine days.

Gaslight and furnace heat are poisonous to flowers, and they should be kept as much as possible away from the latter. At night they should be put in a cool (not freezing) place, with the stems in water and the tops well covered with wet tissue papper.—New York Journal.

Hit and Miss Mind Reading.

It is told of a young man in this city that he called on his best girl the other evening. As conversation became dull they sat on the sofa at opposite ends, and, after a silence of considerable duration, evidently spent by both in hard thought, she mustered up courage enough to ask him what he was thinking about. He, hoping to please her, replied:

"I was thinking of the same thing you were."

She, turning around, answered quicker than lightning, "I'll slap your mouth if you try it!"—Exchange.

THE ADVANCED WOMAN.

She may stand upon the corner in her bloomers if she chooses;
She can smoke a cigarette in public, too;
She may think up shocking thoughts and dedicate them to the muses—
In fact, do anything that's truly new.
But do not yet repine,
Oh, creatures masculine,
For think creation's altered in its plan,
For she always wants to do
Things she's not expected to,
And she doesn't care to do them when she can.

A foremost place in politics—she'll have it if she pleases;
She'll worry over bargains in appropriation bills
And decorate the gavel which untutored man now seizes
With gilt and pretty ribbons till with joy the eye it fills.
She may do it all in style
For a very little while,
But the ultimate result we calmly scan,
For she always wants to do
Things she's not expected to,
And she doesn't care to do them when she can.

—Washington Star.

THE GOODLY SWORD.

The Egyptians Gave It the Name Fifty Centuries Ago.

Half a hundred centuries ago the Egyptians gave to the sword its name. Since those old days the history of the trenchant blade, stained with blood and defaced by the scars of battle though it is, holds much of the glory, the poetry and the chivalry of the cruel game of war.

A friend whose fidelity never wavered and whose power never failed, it is not surprising that men endowed the sword not only with human attributes, but with the might and majesty of the gods themselves. The old legends abound in tales of its magical powers. How the divine armorers strove continually to excel some rival in the forging of a blade of a temper so delicate that it might cut a thread with the same ease with which it struck a head from the body, or hewed through heavy metal armor, was a favorite subject of the old Teutonic and viking tales.

These legendary blades bore characteristic names, by which they were invariably known: Graysteel, Wader Through Sorrow and Millstone Biter were swords of wide renown, and we all remember how Arthur of the Round Table took "Excalibur, the sword that rose from out the bosom of the lake." Caesar's sword was called Crocca Mors; Charlemagne's Joyeuse played no small part in the setting up of the great Frankish empire. Many a bold captain went down before El Tizona, wielded by the relentless hand of the Cid.

The Japanese, whose civilization was old before ours began, have produced beautiful examples of the swordmaker's art. The Japanese nobleman carried his swords as the insignia of his rank. He wore one on each side, thrust into the folds of his sash.

These swords have been handed down as heirlooms from father to son, and it was not unusual for families of ancient lineage to have as many as 1,500 of them—marvels of costly and artistic workmanship—in their possession. The scabbards are richly lacquered and bound about with a silken cord in a curious pattern. The blade is curved, and the round guard is pierced to carry a small dagger. This guard, called a tsuba, is decorated with curious designs, and so great is the ingenuity of the Japanese metal workers that among the thousands of swords they have produced it is impossible to find two guards exactly alike. They are prized so highly by collectors that large sums of money have been paid frequently for an antique sword, only that it might be ruthlessly torn apart to secure the guard.—Mary Stuart McKinney in St. Nicholas.

Absentminded.

It is said that the extempore playing of the great Beethoven was marvelous, but he was entirely without the coolness and self possession required by a performer who wishes to render written compositions with accuracy and finish.

The same fault was found with his conducting the orchestra; even before his deafness he often confused the players by his sudden gestures.

At one time he was playing one of his own beautiful concertos for piano and orchestra. During a long passage by the orchestra, while the piano was silent, he forgot his position and fancying himself conductor for the moment he threw out his arms at a certain chord, knocking both the candles off the piano.

They were picked up, but when the passage was repeated and the loud chord recurred he forgot himself again, and the accident happened for the second time.

The audience, in spite of their great admiration and respect for the master musician, were convulsed with merriment, which so disgusted Beethoven that several strings of the unoffending piano suffered the consequences of his irritation, which expended itself in a prodigious thumping of the keys.—Youth's Companion.

He Wanted His Discharge.

In a regiment in India a private wanted to get home, and saw no other way than shamming deafness. He reported himself sick, and was sent to the hospital. The doctors tried all sorts of ways to find him out, but he was too sharp for them. One day the doctor determined to try him by firing a pistol off just behind him, but he got to hear of the experiment, and of course was prepared for it.

As he and his chum were sitting on their cots opposite each other smoking, the doctor stole into the room, unawares as he thought, and fired the pistol close to his ear. He, however, took no notice of the report, but on seeing the smoke he turned to his chum and said:

"Put your pipe out, you fool, the doctor will be round directly."

His ruse worked.—Pearson's Weekly.

Assay, Essayer, Tasters.

"Cups of assay" and "tasters" were alike in this, that they were both employed for assaying or testing the wine, but in form, weight and value they were different. A cup of assay was a small cup, into which the wine from the hanap, or standing cup, was poured. Sometimes the cover of the standing cup served for the same purpose. The cups of assay used at the coronation of Anne Boleyn were of standard gold, but generally they were of silver, and appear to have been from six to nine ounces in weight. A taster was a small, shallow, circular bowl, with a flat handle, weighing about three ounces.—Notes and Queries.

Not In One Instance, Anyhow.

"My wife is a woman who is very hard to please."

"She has never given any evidence of it."—Detroit Free Press.

Couldn't Do It Himself.

A famous English physician, Sir James Crichton Brown, has risen up as an opponent of the higher education of women. Two years ago, he says, he met a high school girl who was reading "Lucretius" for recreation, but she failed lamentably when he asked her to boil a potato. Quite possibly Sir James would have been equally unfortunate had he been asked to boil the potato himself, or, to cite a more masculine employment, to hitch up his own horse. It is impossible for one person, whether man or woman, to acquire all the accomplishments, but if a woman succeeds with her higher education, as many of them have succeeded, she can afford to pay for having her potatoes boiled. This is now so well understood and conceded that the opposition to woman's advancement is confined almost exclusively to the ultra conservatives, of whom Sir James Crichton Brown appears to be a type.—Philadelphia Ledger.

She Built a Church.

Mrs. Althia Hultz of Artimus, Ky., has built a church through her own efforts alone. A year ago she made up her mind that a church was a need. She asked help from the miners, but they were poor to a man. Nothing daunted, she set to work. She gathered berries, tramped across the mountains and sold them. She raised a pig and a calf and donated them both. In every way in her power she toiled for the good end. Last fall she begged of the miners again, but this time for work. She met with a ready response. A tract of land was bequeathed. Lumber was given. The little store of savings did the rest. The church is now under roof. Little more has been done, but it is a church which one day will be complete, and Mrs. Hultz has her reward.

Mrs. Cleveland.

In evening dress Mrs. Cleveland is the handsomest woman today in Washington. She has a beautiful neck and well rounded shoulders, and with the sparkle of her jewels makes a picture of a White House mistress which is simply regal. Her smile is contagious, for her manners are always agreeably gracious.

Mrs. Cleveland is seen on the street occasionally, walking in the mornings or driving around among the shops. She is the most devoted of mothers, and is never away from the children at night. This has done away with the little shopping jaunts to New York which used to give her so much pleasure during her first residence here.—New York Times.

We are afraid she will be governor. As the case stands now, when a woman is chosen to preside over a meeting of women, she is called the "chairman" and is addressed as Mrs. Chairman oftener than otherwise.—New York Sun.

The Knitted Waistcoats.

The new silks lately introduced for crocheting and knitting fashionable waistcoats forcibly recall the shimmering ones donned by our great-grandmothers and most likely worked by themselves in faint imitation of the gorgeous articles worn by men during several centuries. The modern knitter will probably shrink from vying with the patient skill of the women of a former age, but we may depend on the hand knitting machines and manufacturers' frames to revive the idea and produce marvelous adaptations of the once gaudy craze.

Here is an example of a showy waistcoat lost in 1712 by a Mrs. Beale and described by "Malcolm" as knitted with green silk and gold and silver flowers all over it, further enhanced with about 14 yards of gold and silver thick lace. This smart fashion was probably first introduced from Italy, the country of gold and silver weaving. In fact, there is at the South Kensington museum a coat of Italian origin belonging to the seventeenth century and similar to a cardigan without pockets. It is knitted in pale blue stocking web, set off in front and at the back with wide bands of flowers and scrolls wrought entirely in gold and silver, but whether knitted with the silk or grafted on the webbing is not easy to ascertain through the bad light and glass door. These designs extend about two inches from the shoulder seams down to three inches from the edge, which is knitted with three sets of dice pattern. The somewhat full sleeves are headed with several rows of garter stitch and finished off with gauntlet cuffs displaying the fancy device. Blue silk binds the neck and the fronts, over which are either worked close buttonholes or sewed blue and tinsel buttons surrounded with the Greek pattern in chain stitch.—London Queen.

Ingalls In a Fuss.

"Speaking of lawyers fussing in court," said Chief of Police Seip, "one of the most violent affairs I can remember occurred about 20 years ago, and John J. Ingalls and Judge C. G. Foster were the principals. I was sheriff at the time, and a man was being tried on some kind of a criminal charge. Foster was acting as county attorney, and Ingalls represented the prisoner. Ingalls and Foster became involved in an argument about some point of evidence, and, after jawing each other for some time Ingalls finally called Foster a liar. Foster was at one end of a long table and Ingalls at the other. Foster grabbed a huge ink fountain and threw it at Ingalls, hitting him in the the breast and spattering ink all over judge, jury and all kinds of legal papers. The late Nathan Price was judge, and he fined them $50 each. They apologized next morning, and their fines were remitted.—Atchison Globe.

Great Cures Effected by Paine's Celery Compound.

What Scientific Research Has Accomplished.

Proved by Success Where All Else Has Failed.

There is one true specific for diseases arising from a debilitated nervous system, and that is the Paine's celery compound so generally prescribed by physicians. It is the most remarkable remedy that the scientific research of this country has produced. Prof. Edward E. Phelps, M.D., LL. D., of Darthmouth college, first prescribed what is now known the world over as Paine's celery compound, a positive cure for dyspepsia, biliousness liver complaint, neuralgia, rheumatism, and kidney troubles. For the latter Paine's celery compound has succeeded again and again where everything else has failed.

Sufferers from neuralgia, neuralgic headaches and rheumatism should stop short their morphine, quinine and such paining drugs. No cure can be hoped for from these temporizers. There is one way of getting rid forever of the causes of all this suffering; that is by taking Paine's celery compound. In this great modern remedy the real means to health is attended to; sleep is made sound and refreshing, the appetite improves and the nerves stop complaining, because they get the nutriment that nature requires. This is the fundamental, rational way that Paine's celery compound takes to be able to cope successfully with diseases of the liver, kidneys and stomach, and to guarantee a complete return of sound sleep, good digestion and a quiet, well regulated nervous system.

LONGING.

The hills slope down to the valley, the streams run down to the sea,
And my heart, my heart, oh, far one, sets and strains toward thee.
But only the feet of the mountain are felt by the rim of the plain,
And the source and soul of the hurrying stream reach not the calling main.

The dawn is sick for the daylight, the morning
yearns for the noon,
And the twilight sighs for the evening star and the rising of the moon,
But the dawn and the daylight never were seen in the selfsame skies,
And the gloaming dies of its own desire when the moon and the stars arise.

The springtime calls to the summer, "Oh, mingle your life with mine,"
And summer to autumn 'plaineth low, "Must the harvest be only thine?"
But the nightingale goes when the swallow comes, ere the leaf is the blossom fled,
And when autumn sits on her golden sheave
then the reign of the rose is dead.

And hunger and thirst, and wail and want,
are lost in the empty air,
And the heavenly spirit vainly pines for the touch of the earthly fair,
And the hills slope down to the valley, the streams run down to the sea,
And my heart, my heart, oh, far one, sets and strains toward thee.

—Alfred Austin.

BISARA OF PURI.

Some natives say that it came from the other side of Kulu, where the 11 inch temple sapphire is; others that it was made at the devil shrine of Ao-Chung, in Tibet, was stolen by a Kaffir, from him by a Gurkha, from him again by a Lahouli, from him by a khitmatgar, and by this latter sold to an Englishman, so all its virtue was lost, because, to work properly, the Bisara of Puri must be stolen—with bloodshed if possible, but at any rate stolen.

These stories of the coming into India are all false. It was made at Puri ages since—the manner of its making would fill a small book—was stolen by one of the temple dancing girls there for her own purposes, and then passed on from hand to hand, steadily northward, till it reached Hanla, always bearing the same name, the Bisara of Puri. In shape it is a tizy square box of silver, studded outside with eight small balas rubies. Inside the box, which opens with a spring, is a little eyeless fish, carved from some sort of dark, shiny nut and wrapped in a scrap of faded gold cloth. That is the Bisara of Puri, and it would be better for a man to take a king cobra in his hand than to touch the Bisara of Puri.

All kinds of magic are out of date, and done away with except in India, where nothing changes in spite of the shiny, toy scum stuff that people call "civilization." Any man who knows about the Bisara of Puri will tell you what its powers are, always supposing that it has been honestly stolen. It is the only regularly working, trustworthy love charm in the country, with one exception.

(The other charm is in the hands of a trooper of the Nizam's Horse, at a place called Tupram, due north of Haidarabad. This can be depended upon for a fact. Some one else may explain it.

If the Bisara be not stolen, but given or bought or found, it turns against its owner in three years, and leads to ruin or death. This is another fact which you may explain when you have time. Meanwhile you can laugh at it. At present the Bisara is safe on an ekka pony's neck, inside the blue bead necklace that keeps off the evil eye. If the ekka driver ever finds it and wears it or gives it to his wife, I am sorry for him.

A very dirty hill cooly woman, with goiter, owned it at Theog in 1884. It came into Simla from the north before Churton's khitmatgar bought it and sold it for three times its silver value to Churton, who collected curiosities. The servant knew no more what he had bought than the master, but a man looking over Churton's collection of curiosities—Churton was an assistant commissioner, by the way—saw and held his tongue. He was an Englishman, but knew how to believe—which shows that he was different from most Englishmen. He knew that it was dangerous to have any share in the little box when working or dormant, for unsought love is a terrible gift.

Pack—"Grubby" Pack, as we used to call him—was in every way a nasty little man who must have crawled into the army by mistake. He was three inches taller than his sword, but not half so strong. And the sword was a 50 shilling, tailor made one. Nobody liked him, and I suppose it was his wizenedness and worthlessness that made him fall so hopelessly in love with Miss Hollis, who was good and sweet, and five foot seven in her tennis shoes. He was not content with falling in love quietly, but brought all the strength of his miserable little nature into the business. If he had not been so objectionable, one might have pitied him. He vapored and fretted and fumed and trotted up and down and tried to make himself pleasing in Miss Hollis' big, quiet, gray eyes, and failed. It was one of the cases that you sometimes meet, even in the country where we marry by code, of a really blind attachment all on one side, without the faintest possibility of return. Miss Hollis looked on Pack as some sort of vermin running about the road. He had no prospects beyond captain's pay, and no wits to help that out by one anna. In a large sized man love like his would have been touching. In a good man it would have been grand. He being what he was, it was only a nuisance.

You will believe this much. What you will not believe is what follows: Churton, and the man who knew what the Bisara was, were lunching at the Simla club together. Churton was complaining of life in general. His best mare had rolled out of the stable down the hill and had broken her back. His decisions were being reversed by the upper courts more than an assistant commissioner of eight years' standing has a right to expect. He knew liver and fever, and for weeks past had felt out of sorts. Altogether he was disgusted and disheartened.

Simla club dining room is built, as all the world knows, in two sections, with an arch arrangement dividing them. Come in, turn to your left, take the table under the window and you cannot see any one who has come in, turned to the right, and taken a table on the right side of the arch. Curiously enough every word that you say can be heard, not only by the other diner, but by the servants beyond the screen through which they bring dinner. This is worth knowing. An echoing room is a trap to be forewarned against.

Half in fun and half hoping to be believed, the man who knew told Churton the story of the Bisara of Puri at rather greater length than I have told it to you in this place, winding up with a suggestion that Churton might as well throw the little box down the hill and see whether all his troubles would go with it. In ordinary ears—English ears—the tale was only an interesting bit of folklore. Churton laughed, said that he felt better for his breakfast, and went out. Pack had been breakfasting by himself to the right of the arch, and had heard everything. He was nearly mad with his absurd infatuation for Miss Hollis, that all Simla had been laughing about.

It is a curious thing that when a man hates or loves beyond reason he is ready to go beyond reason to gratify his feelings—which he would not do for money or power merely. Depend upon it Solomon would never have built altars to Ashteroth and all those ladies with queer names if there had not been trouble of some kind in his zenana and nowhere else. But this is beside the story. The facts of the case are these: Pack called on Churton next day when Churton was out, left his card and stole the Bisara of Puri from its place under the clock on the mantelpiece! Stole it like the thief he was by nature. Three days later all Simla was electrified by the news that Miss Hollis had accepted Pack—the shriveled rat, Pack! Do you desire clearer evidence than this? The Bisara of Puri had been stolen, and it worked as it had always done when won by foul means.

There are three or four times in a man's life when he is justified in meddling with other people's affairs to play Providence.

The man who knew felt that he was justified, but believing and acting on a belief are quite different things. The insolent satisfaction of Pack as he amused by the side of Miss Hollis and Churton's striking release from liver as soon as the Bisara of Puri had gone, decided the man. He explained to Churton, and Churton laughed, because he was not brought up to believe that men on the government house list steal—at least little things. But the miraculous acceptance by Miss Hollis of that tailor, Pack, decided him to take steps on suspicion. He vowed that he only wanted to find out where his ruby studded silver box had vanished to. You cannot accuse a man of the government house list of stealing. And if you rifle his room you are a thief yourself. Churton, prompted by the man who knew, decided on burglary. If he found nothing in Pack's room, * * * but it is not nice to think of what would have happened in that case.

Pack went to a dance at Benmore—Benmore was Benmore in those days, and not an office—and danced 15 waltzes out of 22 with Miss Hollis. Churton and the man took all the keys that they could lay hands on and went to Pack's room in the hotel, certain that his servants would be away. Pack was a cheap soul. He had not purchased a decent cash box to keep his papers in, but one of those native imitations that you buy for 10 rupees. It opened to any sort of key, and there at the bottom, under Pack's insurance policy, lay the Bisara of Puri!

Churton called Pack names, put the Bisara of Puri in his pocket, and went to the dance with the man—at least he came in time for supper and saw the beginning of the end in Miss Hollis' eyes. She was hysterical after supper, and was taken away by her mamma.

At the dance, with the abominable Bisara in his pocket, Churton twisted his foot on one of the steps leading down to the old rink, and had to be sent home in a rickshaw grumbling. He did not believe in the Bisara of Puri any the more for this manifestation, but he sought out Pack and called him some ugly names, and "thief" was the mildest of them. Pack took the names with the nervous smile of a little man who wants both soul and body to resent an insult, and went his way. There was no public scandal.

A week later Pack got his definite dismissal from Miss Hollis. There had been a mistake in the placing of her affections she said. So he went away to Madras, where he can do no great harm even if he lives to be a colonel.

Churton insisted upon the man who knew taking the Bisara of Puri as a gift. The man took it, went down to the cart road at once, found an ekka pony with a blue bead necklace, fastened the Bisara of Puri inside the necklace with a piece of shoestring and thanked heaven that he was rid of a danger. Remember, in case you ever find it, that you must not destroy the Bisara of Puri. I have not time to explain why just now, but the power lies in the little wooden fish. Mister Gubernatis or Max Muller could tell you more about it than I.

You will say that all this story is made up. Very well. If ever you come across a little silver, ruby studded box, seven-eighths of an inch long by three-quarters wide, with a dark brown wooden fish, wrapped in gold cloth, inside it, keep it. Keep it for three years, and then you will discover for yourself whether my story is true or false.

Better still, steal it, as Pack did, and you will be sorry that you had not killed yourself in the beginning.—Rudyard Kipling.

TO PEDAL THE OCEAN.

A BICYCLE BOAT TO CROSS TO LIVERPOOL IN THREE DAYS.

A Danish Sailor Says His Invention Can Make Forty-five Miles an Hour—Has Done a Mile In Two Minutes—He Has Not the Money to Build One.

To ride a bicycle across the Atlantic ocean from New York to Liverpool in 70 hours is the ambition of Charles Flint, a Danish sailor man, who is residing now at 148 Columbia street, Brooklyn. Mr. Flint came to this country from Copenhagen 19 years ago. He has followed the sea since he was 12 years old, and he is now 40.

Two years ago Mr. Flint read an account of a flying machine, and it gave him an idea. He worked on the idea until he had constructed a boat 20 feet long, 3 feet wide and 4 feet deep, in which was a bicycle attachment connecting with a big flywheel and a propeller. Mr. Flint launched this boat in the Passaic river, at Newark, and got aboard. He began to work the bicycle pedals. The boat moved ahead. Mr. Flint said that he made 31 miles an hour in the boat.

"It went so fast that I had to ease up," he said the other day. "It was an open boat, and when I went at the rate of half a mile a minute it cut under the waves, and I had to slow up or swamp her."

This boat was destroyed by fire a month after it was made. Now Mr. Flint wants to build another boat on the same plan, but larger. He has constructed the model and claims that when the new boat is completed he can easily make 45 miles an hour in it. The new boat will be 40 feet long, 5 feet beam and 11 feet deep. It will have a flywheel 7 feet in diameter and a number of other wheels connected by gearing chains from the pedals to the propeller.

"I calculate," said the inventor, "that by my arrangement a man can get ten horsepower out of each leg, making 20 horsepower altogether. That will be sufficient to send the propeller around fast enough to get a speed of 45 miles an hour, and it won't be any harder to work than a bicycle. The machinery will weigh about 700 pounds, and there will be 800 pounds of lead on the keel. She will have a displacement of seven tons. It will be an easy matter for three men to cross the Atlantic in her in about 70 hours. As the boat will be all decked over she cannot be swamped. In smooth water I can take off the hatches. Then, too, I will have water tight bulkheads in her."

Mr. Flint says that it would be easy to run her by some motor, but that he prefers the man power idea, and that it is perfectly practicable. The only thing in the way of completing this boat and getting to Europe in less than three days or over there and back in less than a week is that Mr. Flint has not the capital he requires. He says he can build the boat for $700, but he is working for the Barney Dumping company and gets only $15 a week and has to support a wife and two children. To the lay mind it seems pretty hard for a man to send such a big boat through the water at the speed contemplated, but Mr. Flint says that he is certain it can be done.—New York World.

THE IDEAL MAN.

Who He Is, What He Is and Where to Find Him.

The following is the response to a toast at the Philomathians, a woman's club of Cincinnati, by Dr. Ida B. Rulison:

"The ideal man is a married man, of course, and he gives all his salary to his wife. He belongs to no lodge, club or building association to keep him out late at night. He carries no latchkey.

"He permits his wife to run the house after her own fashion, and he makes her his trusted confidant on all occasions.

"He neither smokes, chews, drinks, swears nor scolds, and he always takes care of the babies when his poor wife is nervous and tired, and especially when she goes to her club.

"He does not live in this neighborhood, however, he dwells only—in the imagination."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

A STRANGE CASE.

A West Virginia Judge Sued For the Price of His Own Coffin.

For the first time on record in West Virginia a man has been sued for his own coffin. The defendant is Judge W. P. Thompson, for eight years treasurer of the state, the present judge of the criminal court of Cabell county, and one of the most prominent Democrats in the state, while the plaintiff is ex-Mayor Dickey.

Judge Thompson had had an elaborate and costly tomb built for the ultimate reception of his remains and ordered a coffin from ex-Mayor Dickey, now an undertaker. The coffin was not delivered when specified, and Thompson bought another. When Dickey delivered his coffin, it was refused, and the suit followed. Thompson defended his own case and won it.—Philadelphia Times.

Rather a Remarkable Speech.

Congressman Morse of Massachusetts, better known as "the rising sun statesman," made a somewhat remarkable speech in the house a few days ago which did not find its way to the official record. Mr. Morse, who is generous and kindly, was arguing in favor of a private pension bill, and endeavored to rouse the sympathies of his fellow members by telling them the sad case of a veteran whose application for a pension had been denied. "That old soldier, who had fought so bravely for his country," cried Mr. Morse, "died of a broken heart. Yes, Mr. Speaker, he died of a broken heart, of a broken heart, sir, and he never smiled again; he never smiled again." — Washington Cor. Chicago Times-Herald.

HILL AND NETHERSOLE.

The Statesman Said to Be Engaged to the Great Kissing Actress.

If Dame Rumor is correct in her deductions, David B. Hill has really made up his mind to give society something to talk about. In other words, I have it on good authority that the dark eyed statesman from the Empire State is engaged to marry Miss Olga Nethersole, who, you know, is the tall and good looking English woman who is at present earning fame and a fair number of dollars in a dramatic tour of this country.

MISS OLGA NETHERSOLE.

Miss Nethersole is a very clever actress, and I understand that the senator has been paying her more or less devoted attentions ever since their first meeting, which was a year ago in New York. The wedding is said to be fixed for June and will be solemnized at the bride's home in one of the aristocratic suburbs of London.

I give you this news for what it is worth, but it was given to me by a man who both from a social and official point of view is in a position to know what the senator's plans are, for both the present and the future.—Washington Town Talk.

NO WOMEN SINGERS.

Barred Out of Catholic Churches by a Recent Vatican Order.

Women are no longer to be permitted to take any official part either as soloists or as ordinary choristers in the musical portion of the services of the Catholic church, an exception, however, being made in favor of the chapels of convents. A pastoral letter to this effect has just been addressed by Cardinal Richard, archbishop of Paris and metropolitan and primate of France, to the bishops and clergy subject to his ecclesiastical jurisdiction, and he bases his directions in connection with the matter upon explicit commands lately received from the congregation of rites at Rome.

This congregation is a committee of cardinals specially appointed by the pope for the interpretation of canon law on the subject of the conduct of the various ceremonies and functions of divine worship. Being furnished with plenary powers, its decisions have to be taken as though given by the holy father himself.

It is to the scandal created by the action of certain French clergy in intrusting the solos of the most solemn portion of the high mass to an operatic star who is just at the present time arousing a considerable amount of unpleasant comment, even in the public press, by reason of her moral shortcomings, that the promulgation of Cardinal Richard's pastoral is attributed. He appears to have consulted the pontiff in person on the subject before issuing it.

Contrary to popular belief, even among the clergy, this decree, which bids fair to revolutionize the methods of public worship that have been in use in the Catholic church in every part of the world, except Rome, for ages past, is not a new law, but merely the revival of a very old one, which either intentionally or unknowingly had become altogether a dead letter. Few of the American visitors to Rome who have listened to the thrilling notes of the male sopranos of the so called Sistine chapel choir at the Vatican have known that their enrollment by those prelates in charge of the musical portion of the services at St. Peter's is due to the existence of a law observed only in Rome, forbidding the use of women as choristers and soloists.—New York Journal.

A National Hymn.

Our faith and hope! Our joy and pride!
America, we hail thee!
With thee shall Liberty abide;
Thy sons shall never fail thee;
From north to south, from east to west,
One law, one flag, one nation;
The love that fills each patriot breast
Shall be thy firm foundation.

CHORUS.

Home of the free,
Let land and sea
Sing thy inspiring story,
While, brave and bright,
Thy flag of light
Floats in the van of glory.

The stars that from thy banner shine
Enkindle Freedom's beacon,
To all the world a sacred sign,
A flame that cannot weaken;
A flame that o'er Atlantic burns,
That gilds the orient ocean,
Wherever man for Freedom yearns,
His symbol of devotion.

Republic that no hate divides,
United in affection,
A hemisphere in thee confides
And claims thy strong protection.
And should the just occasion come,
Stand, freemen, calm and steady;
The bugle blast, the tap of drum,
Shall find Columbia ready.

For tyrannies and kingships all
The passing bell is tolling.
O nations, hear Columbia's call!
For ye the world is rolling,
Not for the rulers ye have made,
The puppets of your power.
Rise, freemen, strong and unafraid;
The planet is your dower.

Sublime republic, unto thee
Is given a holy mission,
To lead the legions of the free
To better man's condition.
In this thy glory we rejoice;
Thy sons shall never fail thee.
Beloved land, with heart and voice,
America, we hail thee!

JACK'S TRUE YARNS.

THE OLD NORTH WOODS GUIDE TELLS TWO GOOD STORIES.

How He Captured a Bear With No Weapon but His Boot Toes—He Was Once Saved From Freezing by a Bottle of Kerosene and Some Matches.

Jack Ormiston is still alive to tell some of the most wonderful tales that are heard in the Adirondacks. Jack has been a guide for some 30 years, ever since he has been big enough to carry a pack basket. He is tall and loose jointed, and his muscles are as hard as hickory knots. His black grizzled beard covers nearly all of his broad face. A pair of small, blinking black eyes do most of his talking for him, but when he is properly aroused he can spin a tale at the camp fire that will startle the screech owls and frighten the wailing loons down on the lake shore.

"Yer've heerd some of the fellers say, hain't yer, how I kotched that old bear last fall?" asked Jack.

We assured him that we never had, and it was strictly true, because he had told us a dozen or more times himself.

"Waal, yer must know where Tully pond is," continued Jack. "Blessed if I don't kotch a bear mighty queer there last fall. Jim Hodge give me a lift on the job, I must say, but that ain't the point. Fact is, the great point wuz the toe end of these boots. I wuz comin down this way along ther trail when I heerd a rustling overhead in a tall pine. Golly, when I looked up, kinder quick, sideways, fer I feerd somethin wuz goin ter drop, I see a mighty big bear comin along one of the limbs toward the trunk.

"He started ter come down the trunk back end first, winkin at me. My gun wuz over at camp. I didn't have a thing with me, and Jim wuz half a mile back on the trail. That bear I could see had a mighty fine hide that would bring me somethin like $30, with the bounty. I didn't care ter have him run away, nor did I want ter shake hands with him and pass the time of day with him till Jim come along and put him asleep with a bullet. I didn't make up my mind none too soon. The bear warn't half way down the tree when I rushed at him, not knowin what I would do ter own that hide and capture the bounty. I looked around fer a club, but none come in sight, so when I got ter the foot of the tree there warn't nothin but one thing ter do. I just hauled off and kicked that bear.

"It wuz the first experimentin of the kind I ever heerd of, and by gosh it beat anything I ever see. The bear clawed hard inter the bark and snapped at me. He was easin up a bit with his nails when I swung him another and another. I yelled for Jim and swung again. I yelled six times, kickin between every yell. Then Jim answered, and I kept up yellin and kickin, first with one boot and then the other. The bear didn't drop an inch. Just as he eased up a little bit I swung again. Gosh! It seemed as if Jim wuz takin his time comin along that trail. Just as I swung the forty-ninth kick Jim come in sight. I dropped flat on my back. Jim popped one inter the bear, and it flopped over on ter me. Jim wuz the most surprised man yer ever see. It wuz two hours before I could prove ter him that I wuz tellin the truth about that bear."

Then Jack piled another log on the fire and started in on a new tale.

"This spring I come near bein done fer," he said. "Kerosene kept me in pickle long enough ter get near a fire, and then I wuz all right again."

We wanted to know if kerosene oil wasn't a new beverage for him.

"No, I didn't drink none," he continued. "I started ter cross Brandy brook on a log. I wanted ter cut off a three mile walk around by the trail. The water wuz high, and there wuz a strong current running out inter the lake. This log wuz about a foot and a half through. I rolled it off with the stream. I tucked my breeches in my boots and straddled the log. I hadn't kicked a dozen strokes before I got out inter the swift water, and then I could see I wuz in fer it. I kicked ter back up again ter the shore, but it wuz no use, so I let it go. It came on dark, and my feet began ter freeze. My old boots had been well greased, but the water dripped in at the tops and soaked my stockin's. I tried kickin harder ter keep my blood stirred up. I drifted over toward Bear mountain, and knew that if the wind kept up I would land somewhere before midnight. Just as I wuz gettin almighty froze I thought of a bottle of kerosene I had to oil my gun. Yer can bet I wuz wishin it wuz somethin more cheerin than kerosene oil. A little alkehal and sugar at that time would er slipped down inter them boots from the inside and melted them frozen toes, but there warn't nuthin but kerosene. I poured it half and half inter each boot, and I know it helped ter make me easy fer a time. But by and by it seemed ter me the oil must be freezin too. It wuz lucky I had my old matchbox along in my vest pocket, high and dry, fer then the idea struck me that if I lit a match and sent it down inter the oil it would warm things up some. There warn't much else ter do er think erbout. I wuz makin fer Bear Mountain island slow, but steady. If I didn't get there till midnight, my feet would both be froze off, so I made up my mind ter try the matches. Lucky fer me my boots had wide tops so I could send the lit match right down ter the bottom where it 'ud do the most good. Well, sir, the first match in the right boot did the trick fine. It took fire and thawed things out quicker'n I thought. Blisters raised all over, and when it all got scalded all comfortable I wriggled around and put out the fire. Then I tried it on the left foot, and it worked just as well. There wuz enough matches left to start a fire on the island when I drifted in there toward 12 o'clock."

—Brooklyn Eagle.

Polite Policeman.

The Boston Herald tells of a brave policeman who is especially attentive to the wants of little women who want to cross the streets. It is seldom that kindness makes an error, but in this case the policeman's good natured helpfulness was mistaken.

The pleasant weather had brought out a crowd of shoppers, and among them was a pretty little woman who seemed to be in terror of moving across the street.

She stood on the corner and gazed at the passing throng, unmindful of the many admiring glances cast at her. A car passed the crossing, and was closely followed by another. Then she ran into the street, and the policeman saw her just as she left the sidewalk.

The second car was coming along under right of way, when the officer raised his hand and seized the little woman by the arm. She was so slight that he almost lifted her out of the way of the car and dashed in front of a team on the other side, landing her safely on the opposite sidewalk.

"There, you're all right," he said as she stepped up on the walk and turned to face him.

She shook out her skirts, straightened her hat, and smiled sweetly at him as she replied:

"Yes, I'm all right, but I ran out to take that first car. I didn't want to come over here. Now, will you please escort me across?"

Kissing.

It is thoughtlessly said that man kisses woman, but it is not so. It may be set down as a principle or dogma that it is always the woman who kisses the man. On such occasions man acts only in a responsive and not in an initiative capacity.

To produce a kiss only two things are necessary, and man, except by his mere presence, has nothing to do with its origin. The first circumstance is the opportunity, and the second is the desire existing, though unexpected, in the woman's own mind to be kissed.

When these conditions are present, there is sure to be some kissing, for the woman will, in a dozen ways that cannot be defined, convey the idea to the man, and he, if he be not altogether a stick, will respond to her will. Therefore in all cases of true kissing, it is the woman who kisses, and not the man, who simply responds to a power and influence that he cannot resist. That power lies in a woman, and if it is not present there will not be any kissing.—Pearson's Weekly.

Some of Our Sleepers.

Some of our well known men knit up the raveled sleeve of care by curious and apparently unnatural methods of sleep. Edison, for example, can remain awake a week if his mind is wrapped up in a new discovery. There is a famous doctor in this city who sleeps only 40 winks at a time. Dr. Joseph Howe slept the last 20 years of his life in a Turkish bath. He could sleep nowhere else. W. J. Arkell stays awake from Monday morning till Friday night, then goes to Canajoharie and sleeps for two days. Dr. Depew has lately acquired the habit of taking a siesta and finds it beneficial. Webster could never stay awake later than 9 o'clock. Many a time he was caught standing behind the door fast asleep. His head grew an eighth of an inch a year, and the increasing weight of brain made long sleep imperative.—New York Press.

Drawing the Line.

Many years ago the minister of Forbes, in Aberdeenshire, was Benjamin Mercer, a man of great bodily strength and of great eccentricity of habits. One day as he was preaching a man in the congregation fell very sound asleep. Still Mr. Mercer took no notice of him until he began to snore, and then called to the beadle, "Charlie, wauken up Sandy Much; he's sittin i' the corner o' that square seat snorin." The beadle was quick to act, and Sandy awakened in a hurried and excited manner, whereupon the minister addressed him: "Sandy, I'm nae freely sae hard upon sleepers i' the kirk as some folk, because the preacher is sometimes as much to blame as the hearer, but"—and he held out his clinched fist threateningly—"but, Sandy, I debar snorin."—London Telegraph.

Manners In Suffolk.

A delicate taste and refined manners at the table are not among the characteristics of the Suffolk peasant. One to whom some castor oil had been sent as a gift when he was ill sent the next day with a request for "some more of Mme. Groome's nice gravy." At a tithe dinner an old farmer, having some bread sauce handed to him, took as much as could be conveyed to his mouth on the top of a knife blade, and having tasted it said: "Don't chuse none." Another, by way of expressing approval of a particular pudding, remarked that he "could rise in the night time and eat it," and a third, supposing he would get but one plate, shoveled his fish bones under the table.—London News.

So Much For Strategy.

"If you must read my secrets, do it now," he said desperately. Then, turning his back upon her, he deftly snatched her photograph from the table and pressed it hard against his bosom.

When, by the aid of a powerful X ray, she saw herself pictured in the innermost recesses of her husband's anatomy, she fell into his arms in such a paroxysm of love and confidence that he went to the club four evenings in succession before the good results were over.—New York Herald.

The Popular Bicycle.

Prospects of even greater popularity for the bicycle are pleasant. It means prosperity as showing folks getting on well or better off.—Philadelphia Times.

Temporarily.

"Will you be mine?" he timidly said,
And the maiden replied, "Until we are wed."
"And after that?" "After that," said she,
"You, of course, will belong to me."

—Indianapolis Journal.

"I WILL NEVER UNSHEATH MY SWORD AGAINST THE SOUTH"

According to Commodore J. E. Montgomery, who was the greatest naval commander that the South produced during the late war, Gen. Sherman declared at the breaking out of the rebellion that he would never unsheath his sword against the South. Commodore Montgomery, who now lives in Chicago, thus recalls the incident, Sherman being a colonel at the time:

"When Fort Sumter was fired on Col. Sherman was president of the Pineville Military Academy, up Red river and across the stream from Alexandria. The students were almost all Southern young men. The school was at once broken up, most of the boys going home to be with their families while their fathers took up arms. Sherman came down Red river to New Orleans to take a boat for his home in St. Louis.

"The next afternoon Sherman was escorted to the boat from his hotel by a large party of his Pineville cadets and a great number of the prominent citizens of New Orleans. These, together with those who had come down to the wharf in carriages and on foot to bid friends good-by, made a magnificent concourse of people at the boat's side. After Sherman had boarded the steamer a delegation was sent to him from the crowd asking for a speech. The future great Union general consented. There was great applause as he stepped out on the upper deck and advanced toward the side next the shore. The carriages drew up in line and the ladies leaned out to listen. Sherman made a speech that took all by storm. He told of his great love for the people of the South and of the great kindnesses which had been shown him since he came among them. Concluding his beautiful peroration he said: 'I will never unsheath my sword against the South.'

"The first time I had a chance after Sherman went into the war with sword and spur, I asked him about his speech at New Orleans and his promise to the people of the South. He replied that he meant what he said at the time, but that when he arrived at Cairo he found he had been badly mistaken in his idea of the magnitude of the uprising and felt it his duty to join the Northern forces."

A HANDSOME ARC LAMP.

Which Is Ornamental Enough to Be Hung in a Parlor.

The term "arc lamp" has always seemed to carry with it an idea of ungainliness—a device having no form or shape and strung out over 45 to 50 inches of space, divided up into sections of chimneys, rods, globes and sheet-iron drums—for reasons known only to the manufacturer. The trade has always looked upon an arc lamp as a necessary evil. The demand for something better is universal.

The "A-B" arc lamp is only 32 inches in length over all and burns from 14 to 18 hours. It is a single carbon lamp with only one side rod, which causes only one shadow to be thrown. This shadow may be taken care of against the pole or building, leaving the light intended for the street entirely unobstructed.

The "A-B" lamp furnished in any finish desired—black japan, yellow brass, XVIIth century brass, oxidized brass, oxidized copper, oxidized silver and aluminum. This provides an arc lamp good enough to hang in a parlor—it being possible to match any style gas fixture or decoration. The aluminum lamp complete weighs only nineteen pounds. The casing being of cast iron provides a solid background for ornamentation, giving the lamp a dignified, substantial appearance quite different from the brass and sheet iron spun work usually adopted where ornamentation on arc lamps has been attempted heretofore.

How Insects Multiply.

The power of reproduction in insects is one of the most wonderful parts of their economy. On beheading a slug a new head, with all its complex appurtenances, will grow again; so will the claws of a lobster. The end of a worm split produces two perfect heads, and if cut into three pieces the middle produces a perfect head and tail.

A man writes to this office referring to an "intelligent man." There are no intelligent men.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.

FRIDAY JUNE 19 ..... 1896

An Eastern paper justifies the immigration of cheap foreign labor on the ground that the work he has done when he gets ready to return to his native land remains with us and is added to the wealth of the country. This is a very narrow view of a very broad question. The work the cheap foreign laborer does we can do done by residents of this country if foreign labor was not imported to do it. It is now some years since any needed work has been left undone in the United States for lack of workers. If it be said that the resident laborer would get the work if he would do it as cheaply as the imported laborer the answer is that in the United States the laborer is required to live up to a certain standard. He does not always do it, but it is expected of him. Himself and family feel degraded if they fall behind neighbors following the same avocations. When the cheap imported laborer appears the resident laborer finds his job slipping away from him. If he keeps hold on it by consenting to work at the same price as the foreign competitor he loses his place in the society of his equals. The man who has taken his place has no standard to maintain. If he gets enough to eat, a place to sleep and clothes to wear he does better than he could do at home.

It is quite evident that the Democratic National Convention which meets at Chicago will declare for free silver regardless of the political consequences. If the Eastern leaders of the party, who are known as "administration Democrats," have any intention of attempting to stem the tide which seems to be sweeping over the Southern and Western states, they have not yet signified it. One after another the State delegations are being pledged for free silver, notwithstanding the threatened bolts, and predictions are freely made when the convention meets the majority for the white metal will be overwhelmin. The makers of State platforms usually look forward to national results, but nothing of that kind seems to be troubling the Democrats of the Silver States at present.

Abraham Hayward, the famous "Quarterly Reviewer," once thought that he would like to have some ancestors, so he walked straight to a picture dealer's. Selecting a portrait of a cavalier in half-armor, with features not quite unlike his own, Mr. Hayward made a bid for it; but, deeming the price asked to high, he went his way. A few days later Mr. Hayward went to dine with Lord Houghton, and was astonished to find the picture in the dining room. Seeing that it attracted his guest's attention, Lord Houghton said: "Very good picture that! Come into my hands in a very curious way. Portrait of a Milnes of the Commonwealth period—an ancestor of mine." "Ah, indeed!" said Mr. Hayward; "he was near being an ancestor of mine."

A report lately drawn up by Dr. Lombardo on the sulphur mines of Sicily is so fearful as to be almost incredible. Dr. Lombardo says that in his province alon 5,000 children are employed in the extraction of sulphur, and that it is an established fact that they are literally "spurred" by their overseers to quicken their movements, some of the marks frequently remaining livid on the skin for as long as ten days. These brutal creatures will even burn the arms and calves of the children with their lamps to make them work faster, these burns constantly resulting in lothsome sores, which the doctor has often been required to investigate, as also the disease to which they give rise.

The payment of 300,000,000 of her war indemnity to Japan and the prompt settlement of the American claims for damages suffered by citizens of this country in riotous outbrakes a few months ago show that the resources of the Chinese people are fully equal to the heavy burdens which an unsuccessful conflict has imposed upon them. It has cost China a great deal to settle up the cost of the Japanese war, but the great industrial development which has followed has made that expensive struggle a true blessing in disguise.

The city of Johnstown, Pa., which was over whelmed by the waters of a broken dam May, 1889, engulfing several thousand people, is now a handsome and thriving place of 40,000 inhabitants, having added 10,000 to its population since that calamity. Johnstown lost 10 per cent of its citizens in the raging torrent, yet it is now the most prosperous city of its size in the States.

The timber wealth of the Unted States gives a yearly product of over a billion dollars, or more than twice the value of the entire output of all the mines. Yet nowhere on earth is the wealth of the forests wasted more wontonly than in this country. Trees and forests are dashed down not only without consideration, but with something akin to contempt.

The two gold-bug delegates from Kentucky to the Democratic Convention at Chicago must feel lonely in company with the thirteen silver men sent to vote for the white metal. There is hardly enough gold in that combination to make a good alloy.

It is estimated that the prune crop in California this year will exceed 60,000,000 pounds of cured fruit. In Oregon the prune crop is a failure, while in Europe the prospects for a crop are good.

Congress has adjourned, and if anybody can tell what real good to the country has been accomplished during the late session, we would like to have them name it.

Stray Notice.

The following described horses are running on my ranch:

5 sorrels with reach tails.
2 bays.
1 brown with halter.
1 blue grey.

The owner will please call and pay damages and take them away.

JACOB HODGE.
May 25, 1896. Alabama Ranch.

A runaway team made things look lively for a few minutes last Wednesday. Mrs. A. L. Conklin drove in from Aberdeen in the morning and tied her team at Mr. Gunn's place. In some way the team became unhitched and ran from there down to Edwards street and down that street until they were turned up the street between Mairs' hotel and Irwin's saloon, and ran up that street to the end, where they wound up in a fence, breaking the carriage pole and cutting one horse slightly.

Snap shots and x rays from the Lakeside resorts.

Regular cyclone or cloudburst weather prevails in this section for the past two weeks. The mercury at Lone Pine was 105 one day last week and at Keeler it got up as high as 112 degrees. Plenty of ice in town though, so everyone manages to keep pretty cool anyhow.

Ramsdell, the photographer is in Keeler and remain until after the big celebration in Keeler on the Fourth. He has been engaged to take photographs of the decorations and fireworks display on the night of the fourth. Great preparations are being made for a number-one celebration on the fourth and the festivities will conclude with a dance and supper at Boland's hall. Quite a crowd have signified their intention of coming from Cerro Gordo, Lone Pine, Darwin, Independence, Modock and other prominent points in the valley. Free bathing in the lake will be one of the inducements of the day with probably a row on the lake in the row boat four at a time.

The Hon. J. W. Murphy of Independence, passed through Keeler one day this week and returned on Tuesday. Spud always gets his man when he starts after him. He is also solid for free silver.

Carl J. Walter of Camp Independence is enjoying the balmy and health giving breezes of Owens Lake at present and also improving his time by studying the express, railroad and telegraph business in the Keeler office with agent W. M. Richards.

Mr. S. Zaun, the Lone Pine tailor was at Keeler Tuesday and took several orders for clothing for the fourth of July among the boys.

Mr. Adam McLean of Vallejo, formerly of Nevada City, Cal., a mining man who has been employed at Cerro Gordo for some time, has resigned and went to Modock to accept a situation at that place.

It is reported that Anthony's mill at Post-office Springs is running night and day on rich gold ore. Quite a number of properties in that section are being worked and some more mills are being contracted for.

Mrs. James Holland will probably leave for Chicago on Friday evening and visit friends in that city for the summer and probably until fall.

Children should not be allowed to have any matches, as Keeler had a narrow escape one day this week from some of the little ones having several bunches of matches in their possession. By prompt work of the bucket brigade the fire was put out in a hurry. Everybody should look out and be extra careful, owing to the closeness of the fourth of July, as the little ones are sure to get hold of fireworks and matches.

A Keelerite was explaining to a tourist the tremendous atmospheric evaporation that took place at this point during the summer months. "Why" said he "I have actually seen a dog evaporate and vanish into thin air on a hot day before my very eyes." "Impossible," exclaimed the traveler. "Do you mean to say that an animal composed of solid flesh and bone could evaporate?" "Certainly," replied the citizen. "It is quite a common occurance with us during the sultry weather, and nothing is left on the ground but the ground but the dogs tail, which of course, being on wheels, will not ascend." "How could the dog's tail be on wheels?" asked the astonished tourist. "Well," answered the Keeler man. "You see at the time the dog evaporates the tail is a 'waggin.'"

Yours patriotically inclined.

FOURTH JULY.

From Aberdeen.

Mr. Geo. D. Calvert has returned from Keeler and is again doing business at the old stand.

Mr. Frank Fuller is back from Lone Pine and is "at home" to friends, who will find him enjoying life in his cosy cottage, corner of Rogers St. and Boston Ave.

Messrs Conklin, Rogers, and Neil have been on a hunting and fishing expedition to the mountains.

Messrs Fuller and Malone have gone on a prospecting tour to Nevada.

The warm weather has caused the river to rise to so great an extent that communication between Tibbetts and Aberdeen has become wellnigh impossible, and considerable inconvenience caused by the freight's having to remain to remain in Tibbetts until the water subsides. Certainly there should be a bridge across the river between these two places. There is probably no place on the river where there is more travel, and it is the only place of importance that has no bridge. Let us hope that another summer will not find us without this convenience.

AURORA.

There were two cases on trial in Justice Davidson's court the past week. In the case of Arthur Middleton vs. James Jenkins, charged with battery, the jury found the defendant, Jenkins, not guilty. The other case, Bev. Hunter vs. Willie Cox, it is reported that Cox plead guilty and then withdrew that plea, and the case will be heard to-day.

Those who intend to register this year should bear in mind that registration closes August 9th; and should further remember that if the elector changes precinct residence, after registration; precinct transfer must be obtained by affidavit furnished County Clerk, at least twenty-seven days before election.

Geo. Meads passed through town last Monday with his big team, en-route to a new mining camp on the desert, where he will haul a five-stamp mill from Mojave.

Sheriff Given and Mrs Houle left last Saturday morning, having in charge the insane woman, Mrs. Jenkins who was commited to the asylum at Stockton.

In stating the arrivals from Big Pine last week we made a mistake, saying that Miss Moore had arrived, when the name intended was Miss Wood.

A special meeting of the Board of Education was held this week for the purpose of examining graduation papers. All the members were present.

Arthur Shepherd and Clifford Baxter are expected to arrive to-day from San Francisco. They will come by way of the Kearsarge pass.

M. Showalter and family arrived from Los Angeles last Sunday. They will make their home here and probably settle at Big Pine.

J. G. Fudge came in from Modock last Tuesday. He is hauling for F. Fitzgerald, who, he says, is taking out some fine ore.

Geo. H. Lewis intends starting for Tolumne County within a couple of weeks to investigate the mining outlook there.

Of $150,000,000 deposited in the saving banks of this State, $104,000,000 is in the saving banks of San Francisco.

The case of the people vs. Jack Burse, was dismissed. The principal prosecuting witness having left the County.

Wells Barnes came in from his mine at the White Hill last Saturday. He is taking out some very good ore.

C. W. Fuller and H. Malone of Fish Springs spent a couple of days in town this week.

Mrs J. Shepherd of Georges Creek returned from Keeler the first of the week.

Miss. Frankie Shannon went to Lone Pine this week to visit with friends.

Arthur Smith was among the arrivals from the south yesterday morning.

J. J. Gunn came in from Modock yesterday morning.

Not Alarming.

In the annual report of Harvard college, recently published, a report from the dean of Radcliffe college appears for the first time. This declares the change from the annex to the college to be vital, though not strikingly evident, and evidences of the importance of this change are given. A most important step has been taken, too, in the opening of the graduate courses in Harvard university to women, and, as President Eliot remarks in his report, "The inroad was by no means alarming."—Christian Register.

Inevitable Fate.

"You seem to me a very stupid person," observed the heroine of the society novel.

"And you," rejoined the hero, "likewise seem to me stupid."

HOW TO KEEP HOUSE.

With all the luxuries and pleasures of this life, its big enjoyments and its smaller comforts, there is an effect or antithesis which we have to contend with in the form of aches and pains. In some way and by some means every one has a touch of them in some form at some time. Trifling as some of them may be, the risk is that they will grow to something greater and rack the system with constant torture. There is nothing, therefore, of this kind that we have a right to trifle with. Taken in time, the worst forms of aches and pains are easily subdued and permanently cured by the free use of St. Jacobs Oil. No well regulated household ought to be without a bottle of this great remedy for pain. One good reason for this is that some kinds of sudden pain are acute enough to be fatal, where the application of the great cure might save life. You want it also in the house at all times for hurts, cuts and wounds, and the house that always has it keeps up a sort of insurance against pain.

"KISS ME GOOD NIGHT."

Kiss me good night! The day is done,
Across life's hill the sun has set;
All, all, have left me; only one
Remains to love me—or forget?
We started seaward, to love's land,
Heart—glad with flowers, sun and light—
Lost in the darkness, now we stand.
Kiss me good night!

Kiss me good night! Our lovely year
Is folded up and put away,
The mists are round us and a tear
Is all the pray'r I have to pray
Why do I weep? I only know
Life's awful mystery aright.
You pause, and I have loved you so.
Kiss me good night!

Kiss me good night! No more be said.
For us what can tomorrow bring?
A cry of pain for what is dead?
Another New Year's song to sing?
Time's shadows close around us fast,
Our lamp of love is still alight,
Oh, that we might relive the past!
Kiss me good night!
—Clement Scott.

A WOULD BE FLIRT.

"If a woman really is in love with her husband, she cannot expect to have a very good time at a dance."

So spoke the dearest little woman in all the world late one evening on returning from a pleasant entertainment given by one of our neighbors, as she sank wearily into one of the big sofa cushions that adorned the couch of our room.

I knew by the curious way she had acted during our short walk home that something was troubling her pretty head, so I preserved a discreet silence after the utterance of the above remark. She gave me a quick glance to notice the effect of her words, and seeing me busily engaged in removing a bunch of white carnations from the lapel of my dress coat she continued:

"She may enjoy herself after a fashion, but in order to thrill as she did as a girl it is necessary to be interested more or less in somebody else."

Still I kept silent, and gathering courage from pure lack of opposition she went on:

"If I were only able to flirt, I could get along famously. I have often seen other women add this variety to their lives, and as far as I could ever find out no harm resulted."

"Pray do not abstain from any such enjoyment on my account," I interposed.

"Don't flatter yourself, my dear," she said. "I have the inner consciousness that I have tried and failed—yes, failed utterly."

"Tried what?"

"Tried to flirt, you goose. I determined to try it just as an experiment. I'll tell you all about it if you won't interrupt me and will be real good to me for the rest of my life.

"Yes, I tried desperately to imagine myself an ill treated woman; that I hated you terribly, and finally to make myself believe that such a person as Geoffrey Gordon never existed, but to what an end! Just as I fancied I was succeeding, you would bob up serenely into vision and there you would stay, no matter how hard I tried to forget you."

Of late, after the many social functions we had attended, I had noticed a disposition on the part of my wife to answer only vaguely to my inquiries as to whether she had enjoyed herself at Mrs. So-and-so's musicale, or Miss Somebody's reception, but I never supposed for a moment there was anything serious on her mind, as the above somewhat gloomy expression indicated. So I turned all attention to hear what might be called a confession.

"Maybe you would not be averse to being given an opportunity to use my insurance money, or else a judge in the divorce court might be prevailed upon to render his decision"—

But here my remarks were cut short by a demonstration that would hardly look well in words—in fact, I should be at a loss how to express such a manifestation of feminine protestation.

When she had resumed a state that made intelligibility possible, she broke forth:

"Now, Geoffrey, that is too unkind for anything. When I come to you to tell you all, you stand there and make fun of me. You had better be careful, young man. It may be worse than you suppose. You know what your favorite, Congreve, says:

Heaven hath no rage like love to hatred turned,
Nor hell a fury like a woman scorned.

"So keep real good till I have finished.

"You see, before I was married, whenever I went to a dance, there was always some one—four or five in fact—whom I thoroughly liked, and on whom I could count to speak to me before the evening was over and with whom I could have a pleasant chat and dance. So, no matter how distasteful my present partner might be, my anticipations were pleasant enough to make up for the present.

"There were certain men who perhaps were not actually in love with me (she said this with a perfectly straight face), but who invariably felt disposed to drift in my direction, so that I was kept perpetually buoyed up while talking with the stupid ones and absorbed after they did speak to me by delightful uncertainty as to what the future might bring forth. That, of course, was before I met you, dear.

"When I go to dances now, I seem to lose remembrance of the fact that I am married, and with woman's vanity I begin to be painfully aware that the very men who would have stood on their heads had I asked it in the past I could not count on now to take the least interest in me or to talk other than the dreariest platitudes. They were painfully polite, would advance toward me with few commonplace remarks, and when they favored me at a german with some glittering trinket, for which I used to be crazy, I felt as though it was an expression of charity, portraying that, having made my choice, I must abide by it and not expect any very great exertion on their part.

"I drifted from bad to worse till I reached a state of desperation, and when I saw Mrs. Sweetly gazing fondly into Dicky Robinson's eyes the other evening I said to myself, 'There is a woman who really lives, and the reason she does is because she forgets she is married.'

"Then it was, Geoffrey, dear, that I tried to force myself to forget that you had ever crossed my path—that is, of course, only when I went to some social gathering. You know you are so fond of your cigars.

"Next to do was to find some suitable one on whom I could bestow my affections. Finally I thought I would try Malcolm Wharton, whom I knew to be of excellent family and who three years ago would have given his head to have stood No. 1 in my eyes.

"It was at Mrs. Beckman's reception that I determined to make my flirting debut. So, about 9 p. m., when I knew you would be smoking with the gentlemen up stairs, I purposely placed myself in the path of my erstwhile acquaintance, Malcolm, with such a gracious manner that at first he was puzzled, and then, being of a gallant nature, he soon approached me with an air of attention. I astonished myself by the sprightly, not to say flippant, style of my conversation. My heart went pitapat from excitement, and I was constantly rehearsing to myself, 'Now I must forget Geoffrey,' and so I went on and on, deceiving myself into the belief that I was enjoying myself.

"He became more and more confidential and fascinating, treating me in the fashion that men who are devoted to other men's wives ordinarily assume. I tried to be all animation and really thought that the way he twinkled his nose in bunny fashion was quite interesting. He persuaded me to indulge in champagne several times, and I even took his arm to the supper room. There he was devotion itself and complimented me in the most approved style. After staying some time in the supper room I proposed we should go and hear the music, but he had evidently had too much champange or something else to be reasonable, and so, to be consistent, I could but follow him wheresoever he led. We at last found ourselves in the conservatory and were seated behind a clump of palms when his conversation, which was commonplace enough, had a ring to it that sent the blood flying to my face. His voice sank almost to a whisper, giving me to understand how miserable he had been in his later life and how I could fill that gap of woe. Now and then he would look up in my face to see if there was any evidence of sympathy that he thought should be there.

"At last I had accomplished the very thing I had longed for—here he was at my very feet—and now that I possessed it I shrank from it in disgust. Each word of his felt like ice being forced down my back, I could not find expression to my thoughts, words froze on my lips and I felt as though the eyes of the entire room were on me. The feeling of disgust changed to one of mockery, and he, seeing the change in my manner, doubtless considered me serious and became more effusive in his remarks and manifestations of love.

"The words 'what a fool you are' seemed to haunt me, but still I had to sit there in cold blood and let him go on making an utter fool of himself, for there seemed to be no way to stop him.

"What I would have done I hardly know, for he had seized my hand as though he intended to crush every bone in it. I really think he would have attempted to kiss me, when you serenely entered the room, appearing as an oasis in a desert of torment.

"I wrenched my hand loose and walked over as calmly as I could to where you were standing and greeted you as complacently as was possible. You remember the night—you were so worried about your stocks you did not notice my agitation.

"There, now, don't you think I expiated my crime?"

Of course there was but one way to assure her she had.—University Courier.

Emerson and the Guides.

The poet Emerson was never credited with being a handsome man, though people who knew him saw in his face his beautiful character and forgot to discriminate between him and his appearance. Years ago, when the "philosophers" were in camp at Follensbee pond, in the Adirondacks, Emerson was one of the party, and his devotion to his studies and "worthless writin'" seemed to several of the guides a great waste of time, which might better have been spent in hunting and fishing.

There was, however, a guide, Steven Martin, who became perhaps the most noted that the Adirondacks ever produced, and who recognized in Emerson something of his real worth and upon whom the poet made a great impression. "Steve," as he was familiarly called, was an observing man, and the poet's physical defects, then undoubtedly more prominent than in later years, did not escape his eye, as may be seen from the answer he gave to the question of the writer of this paragraph, "What kind of a fellow was Emerson?" "Waal, sir," said the old guide, "he was a gentleman every inch, as nice a fellow as you ever see; pleasant and kind, and a scholar, too, allus figgerin, studyin and writin; but, sir, he was, I believe, the all fired-est homeliest critter for his age that ever came into these woods."—Troy Times.

The Seed of Hemp.

Chief Justice Cattlin (1571), from whom the Spencers, Russells and many of the greatest English families are descended, when sentencing a prisoner convicted as a go between in the correspondence between Mary of Scotland and the bishop of Ross, thus addressed him: "The good seedsman hath sowed in you good gifts, but as it is said in the gospel, then came the enemy and he sowed darnel, cockle and noisome weeds. Such wicked seedsmen have been in England. If they had sown the right seed for their own use, the seed of hemp, and felt of it, then had they received according to their deserving, hemp, meet seed for such seedsmen."—Temple Bar.

The Good Man's Imitative Dog.

"I have a dog," said a minister who had just heard a precocious story, "that is very sagacious. One Saturday he followed me to church and sat among the people and watched my movements in the pulpit. That afternoon I heard a terrible howling in my back yard and of course went to see what it meant. I found my dog was in the wood shed standing on his hind legs in a dry goods box. He held down a torn almanac with one paw and gesticulated with the other while he swayed his head and howled to an audience of four other dogs even more sadly than I had done in the morning."—Danville Advocate.

Mrs. Pickerell's Chance.

The latest move on the part of woman is to secure the street cleaning. Mrs. Mary M. Pickerell of Denver has obtained the contract by making a bid $6,000 less than that of her predecessor. It has been claimed and claimed again that woman's experience as housekeeper should make her especially valuable in this field. It remains for Mrs. Pickerell to vindicate her own and her sex's right to the reputation of economists.—Exchange.

LABRADOR THE NEXT

EXPLORING EXPEDITION TO LEAVE PHILADELPHIA IN JUNE.

To Study the Eskimo and Collect Flora and Fauna—College Students In the Party. Lieutenant Peary's Old Ship, the Kite, to Take the Party—To Return In a Year.

An expedition bound for the interior of Labrador will leave Philadelphia in June for the purpose of studying the Eskimo and collecting specimens of the flora and fauna of that region. G. H. Perkins of the class of '95, University of Pennsylvania, will be the commander, and the remainder of the party will consist of four students of zoology, geology, botany and archæology and a number of college students and others.

Professor Frank Russell, curator of the University of Iowa, accompanies the expedition as archæologist.

The trip from St. John's, N. F., to Labrador will be made in the ship Kite. At St. John's the Philadelphia party will be joined by ten scientists sent out to explore the coast of Ellesmere Land, and also to discover traces of the ancestors of the Greenlanders, who, it is thought, came from that place. Professor Hite of the University of Pennsylvania, who is the originator of the expedition, said: "The party will leave Philadelphia about the middle of June. The ten scientists who will join our party at St. John's will be sent out by Dr. C. T. Mendenhall, superintendent of the United States coast geological survey; General A. W. Greely, Baron von Saurmajeltsch, J. A. W. Grip, envoy extraordinary from Germany to Norway and Sweden; J. W. Powel, director United States geological survey, and Baron Adolf Eric Nordenskjold of the Royal Academy of Science, Sweden.

"These persons have supplied the wherewithal for the researches of the scientists for a period of one year. The Kite, after leaving St. John's, will cruise around the gulf of St. Lawrence, making collections at the south coast of Labrador, visiting the island of Anticosti for Eskimo remains, and will then go north along the eastern coast of Labrador as far as Cape Chidley. Parties will be left at various points along the coast, supplied with tools and equipments necessary for their researches. At Clarence head, in James sound, Ellesmere land, it is proposed to leave the ten scientists, who will erect winter quarters and a general supply station there. They will make explorations until the six months of darkness come on, when they will return to Clarence head, starting out again in the spring. It is expected to explore at least 300 miles of Ellesmere Land, which in all probability is the original home of the ancestors of the present Greenland Eskimo, who must have crossed to Greenland over 1,000 years ago. Of these people the scientists are desirous of finding traces.

"The Kite will return to Labrador, picking up the various parties, and then keep on to St. John's, arriving about Sept. 12. She will return in 1897, carrying the same number of people and for the same purpose and will bring home the party of scientists from Ellesmere Land.

Professor Hite said that the university cruise to India in September would prevent his accompanying the expedition to Labrador.—Philadelphia Press.

"OUR MR. ELIJAH A. MORSE."

Members of Congress Have Fun With That Gentleman.

Several members of the house were having a good deal of quiet fun yesterday afternoon at the expense of Mr. Morse. They had in some way obtained possession of a circular advertising letter sent out by the stove polish firm of which he is the founder and head.

The communication is on a sheet surmounted by the letter head of the company, with a picture of the establishment where the polish is manufactured. The contents of the letter paper are of the most legitimate advertising character and set forth in detail the superiority and paramount merits of the polish. At the bottom is a four line postscript stating that "our Mr. Elijah A. Morse" is a member of congress and should the recipient of the letter desire any documents or information from the national capital he would be glad to serve him.—Washington Times.

A POOR BOY CAMPAIGN.

Whoever Is Nominated the Real American Aristocracy Will Be Represented.

Whoever is nominated as the Republican candidate for the presidency we shall have "a poor boy" campaign. Governor Morton is the son of a Presbyterian parson and was earning his own living when he was 15 years old. Senator Quay is also the son of a Presbyterian parson down in the mining regions of Pennsylvania and worked his own way through college. Senator Cullom was raised on a Kentucky farm.

Senator Allison's parents were also farmers, pioneers on the western reserve, and he earned what education he got. Speaker Reed's family were well to do, but he also worked for a living when a mere boy, and the same can be said of Major McKinley. Therefore the genuine American aristocracy is represented by all the candidates.—William E. Curtis in Chicago Record.

Ohio Women.

There must be any number of bright women in Ohio. In four publications from that state in one week there were creditable poems by Johnstone Murray, Elizabeth Cherry Haire, Corella Bond, Gabrielle Stewart, Mary Wevill, Edna Heald, Anna S. Roberts and Mrs. Warner Snoad. The State Federation of Women's Clubs and Societies is growing continuously and has almost reached the hundred mark. The 29 colleges and universities of the state, all of which practice coeducation, are more largely attended than ever before, the number of women varying from one-fourth to one-half of the total attendance. This year Oberlin has over 1,400 students; Mount Union, 550; Ohio State university, 900, and Ohio Wesleyan, 1,150, while the remainder average 400 each. Fifty art, technical, industrial and professional schools are equally successful.

To Prevent Hydrophobia.

A correspondent writes that about six years ago he saw an item in a newspaper stating that a German physician was going to die, and he wished to make known the discovery he had made in relation to the treatment of a mad dog bite. The prescription he never knew to fail, and he had tried it many times with men, cattle and horses. It is this: Simply wash the wound as soon as possible in a little warm vinegar and water, and put a few drops of muriatic acid into the wound. This will neutralize the poison and prevent the disease which usually proves fatal.—Boston Journal.

Misdirected Energy.

"A man dat am allus lookin foh er argyment," said Uncle Eben, "am in frequent cases de man dat orter be lookin foh work."—Washington Star.

The night blooming cereus blossoms about an hour before midnight, but by the approach of daylight the flower is a complete wreck, having lost all its beauty and fragrance.

A TRINITY OF EVILS.

Biliousness, sick headache and irregularity of the bowels accompany each other. To the removal of this trinity of evils Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is specially adapted. It also cures dyspepsia, rheumatism, malarial complaints, biliousness, nervousness and constipation. The most satisfactory results follow a fair trial. Use it daily.

Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness, without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, then laxatives or other remedies are not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, then one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction.

"And you actually aver that you learned to ride a wheel without once swearing?" "Yes. I felt too near an awful death to dare to profane."

Mr. Miller Considers Paine's Celery Compound a National Blessing.

There is no spring remedy equal to Paine's celery compound.

Sufferers from debility who find their convalescence too slow, are joyously surprised by the brisk impetus toward recovery that comes from Paine's celery compound. Its healing, nerve-restoring, blood-making, nourishing powers go so directly to the root of the trouble that the progress toward health and strength is steady and uninterrupted.

No relapses come when Paine's celery compound has once fairly begun its healthful action.

With a stronger appetite, sounder sleep, and better digestion (results that every one has experienced who has taken Paine's celery compound), the weak and sore kidneys and the tired stomach cease to trouble, and the nerves allow one to work unvexed by day and to sleep by night without disturbance. This is what physicians mean when they say that Paine's celery compound cures nervous diseases permanently.

For disordered liver, and for all blood diseases, physicians use this great formula of Prof. Edward E. Phelps, M.D., LL. D., of Dartmouth college—Paine's celery compound. It has lifted thousands from beds of sickness. It does what nothing else ever did for the sleepless, the dyspeptic, and the despondent—it cures them once and for all.

Here is a testimonial from Mr. E. A. Miller of Columbus, O., accompanying the photograph of his family.

"For two years past I have been a constant sufferer with severe nervous headaches, oft-times being compelled to go to bed, when my business necessitated my personal attention. Last week my physician recommended Paine's celery compound. I have taken now four bottles, and have not suffered with headache since. This government, in my mind, should pay the discoverer of Paine's celery compound a sum of money sufficient to keep him and all his relatives in luxury during their natural life."

Mr. Miller is the son of Dr. J. D. Miller. His wife is the granddaughter of the late Gov. Lucas of Ohio. Mr. Miller's praise of Paine's celery compound is equaled by that of thousands of others who owe their health and strength to this greatest of all remedies.

COUNSEL.

Crouching down by the fireplace,
A wistful look in your soft gray eyes,
Your lips set firm and a puckered face,
"What shall you answer, will I advise?"

What shall you answer him? Why, No!
Let him steal a kiss—'tis his due—and then,
Give him your hand and let him go,
He is only a man amongst other men.

And if you miss him, perchance you may,
One misses a flower, a shoe, a glove,
The working world's at your feet today,
And work's far sweeter than lukewarm love.

When the right man comes, you will never doubt,
Won't look puzzled or come to me.
'Tis I may go to the right about,
If with that choice, I don't agree.

You may tease perhaps, may coquet awhile,
Most of us do it, but Love will peep
Through your eyes in a sunny smile,
Never were eyes could that secret keep.

Work if you choose for gold or fame,
'Tis the worker's guerdon, but close impearled
Keep the sacred lamp of true love aflame
For him you'd single from out the world.
—Womankind.

DAFTY KATE.

On Seven Mile Beach, Cape May, stands a rough looking house built among the sand dunes in such a way that only its roof and small portions of its walls are visible.

It is made up of wreckage that has been picked up on the shore, with here and there a stick of lumber that looks as if it might have come fresh from the sawmill. The structure has the appearance of a huge ship's cabin. Outside the door stands a bench, well worn by fishermen, who have for more than a dozen years looked after the welfare of the occupant of this modest dwelling, who goes by the name of Dafty Kate.

Dafty Kate is a woman about 40 years old, tall, strong and healthy. For 15 years she has lived in the house on the beach, and many times has she helped the fishermen row through the breakers to some foundered vessel and save the crew. She is rational enough on most subjects, but she is a constant watcher of the sea, and whenever a person comes to her door the first thing she says is:

"Willie is coming in tonight. The Firelight is due here a little past 8 o'clock."

Every night for 15 years Dafty Kate has set on a stand built for the purpose in front of the door of her hut a lantern, which she says will guide Willie safely in if the Firelight should happen to sail in while she is asleep.

The woman's story is an extremely interesting and pathetic one. Fifteen years ago she was called the belle of Cape May. She was the daughter of a prosperous dealer in oysters, who owned a number of sloops and was considered rich.

Kate's parents were very proud of her. She was an only child, and they indulged her in everything that would add to her pleasure. There were two suitors for her hand. One was a thrifty young merchant in a small town near Cape May, the other was the son of an old sea captain whose days of activity were over and who lived a quiet life with his only son and a daughter. A strong attachment sprung up between Kate and the fisherman's daughter, and when the fisherman's son came home from a voyage to the western islands he promptly fell in love with Kate.

Kate's parents were ambitious for her to marry money, and they insisted that she should give the fisherman's son a cold shoulder and encourage the young merchant, but the girl refused to do so.

The name of the man to whom Kate had given her heart was William King, and when he sailed away one day on a trip as mate of the brigantine Sea Foam she was his promised wife.

Kate's father and mother were glad to see William go, for that would give the young merchant an opportunity to press his suit, and he did, but Kate was true to the fisherman's son and would have nothing to do with the man of her parents' choice.

William King's voyage took him to China, and he was to be gone something like 18 months. When Kate's parents found that she would not marry the man, they had chosen for her, they became very angry and turned her out of doors, expecting no doubt that she would repent and do as they wanted her to. But the girl was not made of that sort of stuff. She went to live with the captain's family and remained there for nearly two years, waiting for her sailor lover to return, but he didn't come.

One day a report reached Cape May that the brigantine Sea Foam had foundered somewhere in the vicinity of the Falkland islands, and that all on board were lost. The story had the effect of prostrating Kate, who lay for several months at the point of death, but she finally recovered.

It was noticed that the girl's mind had been seriously affected. She appeared to be rational enough on all subjects but that of her lover's return. She insisted that he would return and insisted upon setting a light on a stand on the beach every night so that it would be a guide to him.

With their daughter's misfortune the hearts of Kate's parents softened, and they insisted on her coming home with them to live, but she refused to do so, protesting that she must stay on the beach, where she could "watch for Willie" all the time. She refused an offer made by her father to build her a nice cottage on the sands. She said she didn't want any comforts that Willie couldn't enjoy, and so one day the fishermen built a rough structure, and Kate took up her residence there.

The captain's daughter spent a good deal of time with her for two or three years, but she finally got married and went at a distance to live. The old captain died. Kate's parents crossed the dark river and the young woman was left alone.

Kate's parents left an estate valued at several thousand dollars, and she was the only heir, but she refused to touch a penny of it until Willie came back to enjoy it with her.

It was thought that the girl's mental condition might improve if she was treated at a sanitarium, and she was shut up in one for three months, but she begged so hard to be allowed to continue her vigil that she was finally allowed to return to her humble home on the beach.

Kate supported herself by fishing and accepting favors from the sympathetic fishermen, who looked after her with a care that was almost affectionate in its nature, and she became an expert oarswoman, and could manage a sailboat equal to the best of them.

Seven Mile Beach is a wild place in the time of a storm. It is open to the ocean, and a good many times the ocean at that point gets exceedingly nasty. A good many vessels have foundered there, and the fishermen along the shore have organized a sort of independent life saving crew, and they have saved a good many lives in the last ten years.

Two weeks ago, during a blizzard that swept up the coast, a three masted schooner struck the bar off Seven Mile Beach. The wind was blowing strong from the southeast. She struck about 2 o'clock in the afternoon, and Dafty Kate was the first to discover her. She gave the alarm, and the fishermen made ready to go to the assistance of the crew, who were helpless in the rigging.

Kate took her place, as usual, in the boat that was launched, and the start was made for the vessel. It was a hard fight, for the waves were running like small mountains, and the boat in which the plucky fishermen were was a large yawl, which is a good sea boat, but not as safe as a lifeboat.

The vessel was rapidly sinking in the sand and had careened so that her deck was completely submerged. It was evident that she would soon go to pieces, and the men in the boat worked like beavers to reach her.

There were five men in the rigging, and their shouts for help could be heard above the roar of the water. It was a desperate battle, but finally the yawl got near enough the foundered craft to enable the occupants to make themselves heard.

"You'll have to jump and take chances on our picking you up!" shouted one of the boat's crew.

"All right," came the reply.

One after another of the men jumped into the seething waves and was picked up. The last man was not as easily caught as the others. He was carried shoreward by a strong roller, but he managed to keep his head above water until the boat got near enough to him to permit of one of the men reaching him. As he was being hauled over the side a wave threw the boat against his head and rendered him senseless.

The rescued sailors were landed safely, and the injured man was taken to Dafty Kate's hut and a physician summoned as soon as possible. It was found that the man's skull had been fractured by coming in contact with the boat, and the doctor was doubtful to what extent he was injured.

Three days the sailor lay unconscious, and all the time Kate was giving him all the attention possible. On the morning of the fourth day he opened his eyes, and one of the sailors who was sitting near him said:

"Do you know me, Jack?"

The wounded man looked at him in a dazed way and finally answered: "My name isn't Jack. Who are you?"

"He ain't straight yet," said the sailor to one of the other men who was standing near.

"Who are you?" asked the sick man in as strong a voice as he could muster.

Kate, who was engaged at preparing some food, stepped quickly over to the cot where the man lay, and taking his face between her hands, looked intently into his eyes for a few seconds, then said, "Willie, Willie, it's you at last," and then she fell to the floor in a faint.

The astonished sailors got the woman out of the swoon as soon as possible, and again she stepped to the cot.

"Yes, it's Willie," she repeated to herself, and the man eyed her sharply as if he was struggling to remember something. Finally he said:

"Yes, that's my name. It ain't Jack."

"Don't you know Kate?" asked the woman eagerly.

The sick man attempted to raise himself on his elbow, but the effort was too much for him, and he fell back senseless.

The man proved to be Dafty Kate's long lost absent lover, William King. He was shipwrecked on the voyage to China 15 years ago, and remembers nothing of the time between then and the day that Kate recognized him. His sailor companions say they only knew him as John Kane. The physicians think that when the man was shipwrecked he received a nervous shock that wiped out from his memory all the events of the past, and that the wound in his head brought him back to where he was 15 years ago.

Now Willie and Kate are to be married just as soon as the man is well enough, and Kate has taken the light in from in front of the door of her humble home on the beach.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Stage Smoking.

If you ask the heavy villain why he doesn't smoke cigars on the stage, he will tell you that no property man, however important the company may be, will consent to supply cigars. Cigarettes are much cheaper, and the stage villain who defies all traditions and smokes cigars always does so at his own expense. And this is rather expensive, inasmuch as the villain of the drama usually wears a dress suit, is supposed to be plentifully supplied with ill gotten gains, and only takes two or three puffs at whatever he is smoking before throwing it away. Until the property man volunteers to furnish cigars we must be content with the cigarette of the stage villains.—Philadelphia Times.

THE CABINET CAMEO.

A SKETCH OF RICHARD OLNEY, SECRETARY OF STATE.

Aristocrat to the Core—A Corporation Lawyer—How Cleveland Discovered Him—Intensely American—As to His Presidential Boom.

Richard Olney, our secretary of state, is hard, lucid, scintillant, sparsely sown of his sort, and therefore valuable—in fact, a man diamond. A cold sparkle, as of frost, not of fire, goes with Olney. He is clear, frigid, wintry and has no sympathies.

Being superbly egotistical, no tale of woe moves him, being thoroughbred, a challenge to battle brings him speedily forward.

Born in 1835, Olney was full 24 years of age when Fort Sumter became the first target of the war. Olney, however, declined all act or part in the war. The first regiment to march southward came from Massachusetts, but its enlistment rolls wooed Olney in vain. He staid soberly, resolutely behind. This was not cowardice, for his courage is proof. It was the cool selfishness of one who thinks first and best of himself.

By blood and birth Olney is an aristocrat. He believes in pedigrees and crests and family trees and coats of armor. His ancestors came with the Mayflower, a craft, by the way, which must have had a giant passenger list, as well as such a cargo of furniture as should have consumed forests in its construction.

Olney is of the nobility of New England. He wedded a daughter of the Butlers, also of the Mayflower and the patricians. By nature he is exclusive, seclusive, shields himself selfishly from common contact, has few acquaintances, fewer friends, wraps himself in his cloak and withholds his hand.

In his way Olney has the merit of changelessness to a degree, indeed, which half breeds the theory that he is great. A man gem, as I have said; no influence corrodes, no fires melt; under all pressures, through all conditions, Olney is immutable.

He graduated from his college at 21, and was a lawyer of the Harvard washings and diggings three years later. This was in 1859; the war was on the nation's threshold.

The war was a good thing for Olney. It eliminated many a bright fellow, reduced rivalry, and left Olney a wide, rich field to his sickle. The young lawyer went about his reaping with a sage prudence that soon gave him a rich practice.

From the first Olney was busy with the tillage of great companies; digging about corporate roots and pruning corporate branches, a fashion of money culture. And he liked it, served well, was paid well and it was all an experience much to his taste.

Reared at the knee of corporations, soaked in a stock company vat, Olney—no wonder—sees things through corporation spectacles. Yet he is honest and high minded; would do no dishonorable thing. He believes in money and the rights of money, and is more impressed by property than by a man. Personally he is worth a cool million, nor is he likely to lose it. There's no danger of his forgetting where he has put it down.

Olney's mind is a law mind. What with study and what with experience, Olney is one of the best lawyers in the country. He does not shine in court, cares little for forensic glory or the wreaths of the trial table, but he knows the law. And in its application to the interests of his clients he has always been daring, enterprising and sure. No one ever found him wrong. At the time of his arrival in the cabinet, what with this railroad and what with that, Olney was drawing aggregate retainers to the sum of a round $100,000 annually. In picking up politics Olney has not mislaid any of his connections.

Olney does not care for politics, and still less for place. The Democracy inherited him from the Whigs. It is from this Whiggish, Henry Clay source he draws a mild sentiment for protection. Olney is not a free trader, and cares nothing for sailors' rights.

Cleveland discovered Olney. This was at Buzzards Bay in the four years between Cleveland's two presidencies. Olney abode on the opposite Buzzards bay shore. They formed a catboat acquaintance while fishing in the bay, and finally sought each other on each other's porch, and were friends. Cleveland believes Olney to be one of the profoundest lawyers he ever met, and Cleveland is entirely right as to that.

Olney didn't want to come to the cabinet. Cleveland persuaded him as to a duty. He also took moderate counsel of his vanity. But he has never liked his place, and tries at intervals to resign. Cleveland has always been able to talk him out of this mood. As it now stands, Olney will remain to the last.

More than any other's Cleveland takes Olney's advice, and whether as attorney general or secretary of state the president has made no weighty step, assumed no position of importance, until after a thorough ransack of the subject with Olney.

As secretary of state, Olney has been marked by a prompt readiness to oppose a foreign encroachment, even to the point of courting a foreign war. This is instinct with Olney. He is cold. He is an aristocrat, and, as becomes the latter, he is selfish. But he is also utterly the American. He fears no power on the map, and would meet war with any or all with the abandon of a zouave.

Your New Englander fights readily. He is of a stern brood, your New Englander, and besides his natural thrift has never been aroused by war, for he ever made pleasant money by it. New England was richer at the close of the Revolution than in 1776. From 1812 to 1814, cutlass in hand, New England took millions on millions of prize dollars from the British and founded herself. That's half the basis of all her money now.

Your Yankee fights coldly, and opens a set of books on the battlefield. When he throws a battery into position, he charges it. When he blows an enemy off the earth, he credits it. You can't whip him. He is simply doing business with a foe. He will fight while it pays 3 per cent. When it ceases to flow an interest, he will limber up his guns and ride away. From cradle to grave with your Yankee his life is ever listed as part of his assets. And Olney is pure Yankee, and splendid as a specimen.

Olney's recent boom for the presidency was and is no growth of him. It was purely the work of Josiah Quincy and a coterie who sought to head off ex-Governor Russell in some attempts at favorite sonism he was just then embarking upon. They neither consulted nor notified Olney. He is wroth at their use of him. He has so instructed them, and his name will not be heard of at Chicago.

At the close of his term he will return his portfolio to its shelf and quietly reimmerse himself in railway law. He will cover himself with obscurity as with a mantle, and struggle to be as unknown hereafter as he was before Cleveland lured him to become a cabineteer. His joyful satisfaction will grow just in proportion as he disappears, and he will be entirely happy only when he is entirely hid. Such, in brief, is Olney, the cameo of the cabinet.—A. H. L. in New York Journal.

A TALL WHITE HAT.

Once Worn by Lincoln and Now the Subject of a Lawsuit.

A suit in replevin has been brought in Washington before Samuel R. Church, justice of the peace, by Walter C. Clephane, attorney for Emma H. Adams and James O. Adams, her husband, administrators of the estate of Phineas D. Gurley, deceased, who was for many years pastor of the New York Avenue Presbyterian church. The defendant named is Osborn H. Oldroyd, who is the owner of a collection of Lincoln relics, now in the house where Lincoln died, 516 Tenth street, and the suit is to recover possession of a tall white hat, with a broad black band, which the plaintiffs claim is valued at $10, and at one time was owned and worn by Abraham Lincoln, late president of the United States.

It is claimed by the plaintiffs that the hat is being unjustly detained by Mr. Oldroyd. The writ was issued, and the hat was delivered to a constable, who put it in possession of the plaintiffs, they giving bond. It is claimed by the plaintiffs that the hat was given to Dr. Gurley by Mrs. Lincoln after the death of the president, and that it remained in the possession of the family of Dr. Gurley until they loaned it to the government. When the house on Tenth street was fitted up as a Lincoln museum, the hat was transferred there.—Washington Star.

BLAINE'S RESTING PLACE.

His Widow Contemplates the Purchase of a Site Near Augusta, Me.

Mrs. Blaine, widow of the late James G. Blaine, is contemplating the removal of his remains from Washington and has in mind the purchase of a site for their last resting place. This site is about a mile from Augusta, Me., on the road to Manchester, and is at present owned by Mr. W. H. Gannett, a wealthy Augusta publisher.

The place, which is very rural and beautiful in its aspect, has been improved by Mr. Gannett, who has dammed the streams, where he proposes to introduce colonies of beaver, animals now nearly extinct in Maine.

Mrs. Blaine's contemplated purchase is for a portion of Mr. Gannett's park, which she would convert into a private cemetery, after the fashion long peculiar to New England. The location is on the brow of a hill, from which there is a splendid outlook over the Kennebec.—Washington Post.

Patriotic Citizens.

With the temperature at 20 degrees below zero the patriotic citizens of Houlton, Me., held a public meeting a few days ago to make preparations for celebrating the Fourth of July. It is proposed to make the celebration of the Fourth this year the biggest thing in its way that has been seen in that part of Maine, and it was necessary to begin in good season.

Too Lazy to Get Married.

Dr. Felix Adler proclaims that after a careful study of the institution of marriage he has come to the conclusion that marriage is better than celibacy. He believes, too, that most persons who refrain from marriage do so "because they are too lazy to make a change in their life."—Illustrated American.

Mayor Pingree's New Title.

Mayor Pingree still holds the public eye as a man of innovations. He has lately enriched the vocabulary of polite indignation by inspiring a member of the Detroit board of education to refer to him as a "fabricationist."—Washington Star.

X RAYS WORK CURES.

DR. MOUNT BLEYER DISCOVERS WONDERFUL PHYSICAL EFFECTS.

Plants Are Developed to Twice Their Natural Size—They Promise to Produce Remarkable Cures In Tubercular Diseases. An Instance of Rheumatism.

While the whole electrical world is studying the effects and behavior of X rays and the medical profession is testing their value for the purposes of diagnoses, it has remained for Dr. J. Mount Bleyer of New York to direct attention to the possibilities of these and other light rays in the field of therapeutics. Dr. Bleyer, who is an F. R. A. M. S., a member of the French Electro-Therapeutical society of Paris and a professor in the National School of Electro-Therapeutics, has an article in the last number of the New York Medical Journal, entitled "Crookes' X and Other Light Rays—A Problem Yet to Be Solved In Therapeutics, Etc."

"It is fair to presume," he says, "that the rays have a subtler power than this one of penetration. Ordinary light is one of the main factors in the development and growth of animal life. We have studied the effects in this direction, and know that sunlight is essential for the growth and development of both animal and vegetable tissue. What effect may these different light rays have on pathological conditions? I have undertaken a few investigations in order to ascertain the effects of these rays upon animal life and upon the tissues. The only leg we have to stand upon at present is the singular phenomenon of the penetrative force of these rays. Is not the hypothesis fair to set up that these rays, in forcing their way through tissues, exercise some action upon the tissues in their transit through them? The work is notably slow and tedious, besides involving much cost and time. I can hold forth little beyond saying that up to the present moment close observation of the action of these rays upon animal and vegetable life is being carried on."

After referring to such evidence as has been accumulated on the subject, Dr. Bleyer concludes: "Why, then, may we not expect that rays of light propagated from many sources will give us valuable effects in disease and growth? I bring these arguments and the problematic question before the notice of the profession in order to stimulate others besides myself to enlarge this field of investigation, as there is no telling what hidden forces await our unraveling of their laws and their probable therapeutic application, etc."

Dr. Bleyer was found at his residence, and asked by a reporter to state more fully the nature of his observations and discoveries.

"I am not yet prepared," he said, "to go into details, because these must first be communicated to my profession, but I can tell you some things in a general way. First, do not make the mistake of supposing that I am confining myself to experiments with the X rays. I am studying the effects of different rays of light both singly and in combination with each other, and have secured some remarkable results. The remarkable effects of the rays of the ordinary arc light in forcing the growth and fruition of plants have been observed both by myself and the authorities of the botanical gardens at Washington. Under their influence many plants can be nearly doubled in size and brought to fruitage in a very much shorter time than by the ordinary course of nature. I recently ripened a green banana in 14 hours by exposing it to arc light rays. Think of the commercial possibilities of producing fruits and vegetables in advance of their season by the use of electric light!

"Now, as to therapeutical results, I have made experiments which satisfy me that the bacilli of diphtheria and tuberculosis can be speedily and effectually destroyed by concentrated rays of sunlight brought to bear on them. I recently destroyed some specimens of both in from four to ten minutes. My method would be to concentrate the sun's rays by lenses and pass them through the chest or throat of the patient, according to the nature of his affection, after interposing a plate of blue glass to interrupt the heat rays.

"This brings us back to the theory advanced 20 years ago by the late General Pleasanton of the United States army. His theory caused a good deal of fun to be poked at him, but he was nearer truth than his critics suspected. About ten days ago a man came to me suffering from a rheumatic knee joint. By the use of concentrated sun rays passed through a plate of blue glass I cured him entirely in four days.

"From this time I shall devote myself to the treatment of phthisis by this method. I do not mean that anything can be done for a patient in the last stages of consumption, but I have great hope of relieving patients in the early stages. Apart from the great boon to humanity of such a result, there are the monetary considerations involved in saving the large number of valuable cattle annually slaughtered because affected with tuberculosis.

"As to the X rays, I have noticed some curious physical effects on myself. Exposure of my hand to them produced well defined sensations, which eventually became painful. Placing my head in the rays caused a violent headache, which lasted for three hours. These are evidences, you see, of marked physical effects."—New York Recorder.

A REAL PHILANTHROPIST.

James H. Stout of Wisconsin to Establish Traveling Libraries.

State Senator James H. Stout of Menominee, Wis., noted for the liberality he has displayed in aiding the cause of education, has evolved a plan for traveling libraries, and will make an experimental trial of his project in his own county at his own expense. Details have not been made public, but in a general way it is designed to convey useful books and the best literature to persons living in remote districts, to whom they are usually inaccessible.

Senator Stout is a member of the lumber firm of Knapp & Stout. He removed from St. Louis to Menominee in 1889, and one of his first acts in his new home was to establish at his own expense a manual training school. From a small beginning the school has grown until it is now one of the best equipped in the United States. The present buildings and machinery cost $70,000, and as fast as funds for enlargement are needed they are supplied by Senator Stout. The school has been a success from the start.

The very best instructors are employed, and the work done compares favorably with any done elsewhere, greatly to the pleasure of the donor, who takes a deep interest in every one of the pupils. Senator Stout became interested in the subject of manual training during his residence in St. Louis. On going to Menominee in 1889 he conceived the plan of starting a class in manual training, and made a proposition to the school board to that effect, offering to bear the expense.

This liberal offer was accepted. The school started in a small building, but the interest shown in the work brought with it a demand for larger quarters, and Senator Stout erected the present handsome, perfectly appointed building, which is not only the pride of Menominee, but of the northwest part of the state.—Chicago Times-Herald.

A GREAT SOUVENIR.

Scheme to Honor the Kaiser's Consort Just Started.

The writer wishes to arouse some enthusiasm in German circles and societies of our large cities in favor of creating a grand souvenir album for the empress of Germany. The album, which may reach a cost of $10,000, shall contain several hundred pages of vellum, on which the poetical dedication of the ablest German-American authors can be engrossed.

The designs for the album cover are to be executed in silver repousse work.

The project, if carried out, will embrace a rare opportunity for American art and literary genius to display themselves on an exquisitely chaste souvenir.

The souvenir is to be dedicated by German-American ladies to the empress of Germany, Augusta Victoria, in remembrance of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the proclamation of the German empire.

I anxiously solicit your moral support and influence for a brief notice of the project in your journal, as I am desirous to reach some prominent people who will take the initiative in the matter.—Ernest T. Zeltner in New York Journal.

SPARROWS CUT THE CORD.

How the Little Birds Protected Their Nest From Spoliation.

One day last week I unfurled for the first time this season the duck awning which has been folded without my office window all winter. As I did so a tiny bird's egg fell from the folds, crushing on the pavement below. Since then I have noticed an unusual commotion among the English sparrows that make pretty free use of my window sill, and today, when the sun swung round the bank building across the way, and I went to lower my awning, I found that the cords had been cut.

Investigation revealed the fact that the intelligent little sparrows had rebuilt their nest in the folds of the awning and in order to prevent a repetition of last week's depredations had themselves severed the cord with their bills. I suppose I shall have to bear the sun till the little nestlings have left my awning free. Such forethought as the birds have exhibited is surely worthy of consideration.—Shreveport (La.) Letter to Philadelphia Times.

Some Remarks.

Reed—
I'm striving daily, striving
To show that all may see
The glory and the greatness
Of the only G. O. P.,
To make it have a record
In congress that will stand,
And when you meet the voters
All over this broad land
Just tell them that you saw me.

Morton—
I'm doing all my duty
As governor of the state
With reference to the party
And what will make it great.
I labor late and early
Entirely for its gain,
And when you meet the voters,
From Mexico to Maine,
Just tell them that you saw me.

Allison—
I'm keeping very quiet,
I haven't much to say,
Because I am so busy
With work that comes my way.
A statesman's work I'm doing
To make the party great,
And when you meet the voters
In every town and state
Just tell them that you saw me.

McKinley—
I'm working in my office,
A private citizen,
Appearing not in public
By word of mouth or pen,
But in my private bosom
I love the G. O. P.,
And when you meet the voters,
Wherever they may be,
Just tell them that you saw me.

Quay, Manderson, Cullom—
We have no words to offer,
Our deeds commend us and
Our register of service
Is known to all the land.
Like lambs led to the slaughter,
We yield without debate,
And when you meet the voters,
Those arbiters of fate,
Just tell them that you saw us.

A BISHOP'S WILD RIDE

RODE FORTY MILES CLINGING TO THE STEPS OF A VESTIBULE CAR.

Hung on Desperately While the Train Flew on at the Rate of Fifty Miles an Hour—A Keen Wind and Rain Cut Into His Flesh.

Bishop John J. Esher, 72 years of age, head of the Evangelical association of Illinois, Ohio and Pennsylvania, had an exciting experience the other night that would have tried the nerves of a stronger and younger man. However, he has been all over the world, has crossed the Atlantic 30 times and is not easily frightened. His latest adventure was riding on the lower step of a sleeping car on a fast train going at the rate of 50 miles an hour, he being unable to either get off the train or into the car. Bishop Esher had been going the rounds of the churches in his diocese, his last stop being at Reddick, Ills., a small town on the St. Louis division of the Wabash railroad. He preached to a large congregation there. He lives in Chicago.

BISHOP ESHER.

The limited train came through Reddick at 4 o'clock in the morning and stopped at a water tank for a few minutes, so the bishop, accompanied by Rev. Jacob Schwartz, pastor of the Reddick church, drove to the tank and waited. When the train came along, the venerable bishop mounted the steps of the last sleeper just as the cars began to move. But being incumbered by a heavy satchel he could not knock on the vestibule curtain so as to attract the attention of the porter.

Faster and faster the train moved, and the bishop, his flesh cut by the keen sleet driven by a strong wind, and thoroughly drenched by a heavy rain, clung to the railing of the platform for dear life. Station after station flew by, and the train showed no disposition to stop, although the aged prelate prayed that it might. But it was the limited, and would not pause until it reached Englewood, 40 miles from Reddick. Almost dead from cold, the bishop hung on, although his senses were nearly gone, and several times he thought he would surely lose his grip, but he didn't, and just as the train was drawing up to the station at Englewood the colored porter happened to look out.

"Fo' de Lawd's sake," he gasped, as he saw the white haired bishop balancing himself on the lower step, and, hastily unlocking the door in the vestibule curtain, he seized the old man by the shoulders and dragged him inside. Stimulants judiciously administered soon restored the bishop, and when the train rolled into the Dearborn station he had almost recovered from his exciting experience.

The bishop said that, although he had traveled a great deal, this was decidedly the roughest trip of his life.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

A MOVING MOUNTAIN.

It Moves Fifteen Feet a Day—Causing Great Alarm and Much Wonder.

The object of greatest interest in continental Europe at this minute is a walking mountain in Gard, France, which is moving toward the river of the same name at the rate of 15 feet a day. The advance has destroyed the machinery in the pits of the Grand Combe colliery and nearly a mile of the Alais railway. The great thing now is to prepare new channels for the Gard and Garden rivers, which are sure, when the landslide comes, to be completely choked up.

Six hundred persons have been obliged to leave their homes at Grand Combe. The lower strata of the mountain, which rises sheer from the valley, are grit and green marl. Both have given way owing to filtration of rain. Recently 5,000 persons went from Nimes to see the moving mountain. The noise it makes is frightful, and there are wide cracks in all directions. Nobody is allowed to go on the mountain or into the valley on which it advances.—New York Journal.

LIKE A STORY BOOK.

Runaway Frank Thornleigh Returns to Save His Father's Home.

Frank Thornleigh left his home in Hamilton, Mich., 12 years ago because his father had married a widow. He shipped as a cabin boy on a boat to Buffalo, where he fell in with a Canadian horse dealer, with whom he remained until the old gentleman died, a short time ago, leaving Frank his estate of $50,000. Thornleigh visited his old home last week and was just in time to save his father's home from being seized on a mortgage.

His stepsister, whom he had left as a little girl, had grown up into a beautiful young woman. They have just been married.

A Statue of Dempsey?

It is said that there is a movement on foot to erect a statue to the memory of the late pugilist, Jack Dempsey. The statue will, according to the story circulated yesterday, be placed over Dempsey's grave in Calvary cemetery, Long Island.

Dempsey's body has not yet been interred in Calvary, but will be brought on from Portland, Or.

The statue is to be a life size figure in ring costume, if the story told is true.

The statement was made that many noted sporting men, among them Fitzsimmons, would subscribe for the monument. Fitzsimmons was alleged to have offered $200. This was denied by Fitzsimmons.—New York World.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

IRV. H. MULHOLLAND, EDITOR.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.

FRIDAY JUNE 26 ..... 1896

Democratic Platform.

Declaration of principles adopted by the State Convention at Sacramento, Wednesday, June 17th, 1896.

The Democratic Party of the State of California is unalterably in favor of the free and unlimited coinage of both gold and silver at the ratio of 16 to 1, without waiting for or depending on the action of any other Nation; and it demands the use of silver as well as gold as a full legal tender in payment of all debts, both public and private.

TOUCHING THE RAILROAD.

Resolved, That the Democratic Party of the State of California, resents the interference in the politics of this State of the Southern Pacific Company of Rentucky; that we denounce the system of "boss" politics largely created and fostered by that corporation, which has corrupted public men and public life, and under which only those who find favor in the eyes of the corporation, and stand ready to do its bidding have held office. Under this influence our youths have been taught that political principles and political duty may be justly traded of for personal gain and preferment at the hands of the "boss" to the almost entire destruction of that healthy public spirit, without which no Government of the people can hope to continue in existence.

AGAINST THE FUNDING BILL.

That we are unalterably opposed to the funding bill now pending in the Congress of the United States, or to any other similar measure, and we demand that the Southern Pacific Company and all other corporations subsidized by the Government be compelled to fill their obligations in the same way that private debtors are compelled to liquidate theirs. In other words, we are opposed to any system which will permit the subsidizing of Federal corporations to pay their interest-bearing debt at the rate of 2 per cent., while the Government itself is compelled to pay 3½ per cent. for money with which to carry on the public business.

We request our delegation elected by this Convention to the coming National Convention to use their influence and energies to have the above-mentioned plank inserted in the platform to be adopted at Chicago by the Democratic National Convention.

REPRESENTATIVES ENDORSED.

That the Democratic Party of California, in convention assembled, recognize with pride and satisfaction the able, patriotic and distinguished services of Senator Stephen M. White and Congressman J. G. Maguire, and do hereby extend to them its grateful acknowledgments of the same, and particularly their opposition to the funding bill, and their conspicuous and valuable services in behalf of a free harbor for Southern California.

NICARAGUA CANAL.

That this Convention realizes that the industries of the Pacific Coast are duly depressed by reason of commercial isolation and our inability to compete in the markets of the world while handicapped by the thousand miles of perilous ocean navigation. That the construction of the Nicaragua Maritime Canal is of the greatest political and commercial importance to our country, and especially to the Pacific Coast States, and we respectfully urge the Democratic National Convention to pronounce distinctly in favor of taking such action by Congress as will provide for its early construction under National auspices, but we are opposed to a subsidy being granted to any corporation for that purpose.

ADMINISTRATIONS APPROVED.

Resolved, That we indorse the administration of President Cleveland except as to his financial policy. His foreign policy has been wise, statesmanlike and patriotic, and his domestic policy has been pure and incorruptible,

We indorse the administration of Governor Budd, and earnestly commend his vigorous efforts to enforce economy and efficiency in the public service, and congratulate the taxpayers on the great saving he has made in the cost of administering the public institutions of the State.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM.

Resolved, That the Democratic Party is the defender of the unabridged fundamental right of religious freedom guaranteed every citizen by Section 3, Article VI., of the National Constitution, which declares that no religious test shall ever be required as a qualification to any office of public trust under the United States, and holds all secret political societies as mischievous in purpose and contrary to the spirit of republican institutions, a democratic form of government, the Constitution of the United States and of the State of California.

As the upholders of the Constitution and the civil, religious and personal rights it guarantees, the Democratic Party denounces the methods and aims of the secret political organization miscalled "The American Protective Association," for having religious proscription as its basis and the exaction of a religious test as a qualification to office for its mode of action.

Resolved, That we hereby denounce the action of the Republican Party for raising a false issue of the possibility of State aid being granted to sectarian schools, and we reaffirm our loyalty to the Constitution of California, which in Section 8, Article IX, declares that no public money shall ever be appropriated for the support of any sectarian or denominational school or any school not under the exclusive control of the officers of the public schools; nor shall any sectarian or denominational doctrine be taught or instruction therein be permitted directly or indirectly, in any of the common schools of this State.

FOR PURE FOOD.

We thoroughly appreciate the great danger to human life through the general adulteration of food, and believing that life and health are of paramount importance, we pledge ourselves to take such measures as will protect both in every way consistent with our form of government.

MINING INDUSTRY.

We congratulate the Democratic Party and the people of the State of California on the fact that by the legislature initiated by the Democratic Party under the platforms of our conventions held respectively in 1890 and 1892 the mining industry in all its branches has received an impetus, which to-day gives it a leading position in the development and progress of the State.

We favor the continuation of the work so auspiciously commenced and recommend continued aid by the National and State Goveonments on the lines laid down in the law, to the end that all interests involved be fully and adequately protected, and each given the recognition demanded by the important bearing each has upon the other.

We believe in fostering the mining industry in all its branches and favor the rehabilitation of hydraulic mining wherever it may be carried on without material injury to any other industry.

The preservation of the navigable rivers of California is of the greatest importance to the commerce of the State, and we therefore urge upon our delegation in Congress the importance of securing liberal Government appropriations for the improvement and maintenance of the navigability of our rivers and for the preservation of the San Francisco Bay and other harbors in the State.

We pledge the utmost endeavors of our delegation in Congress in the effort to place the improvement of the Sacramento and San Joaquin Rivers under the contract system.

We reaffirm our adherence to the principles of the tariff platform of the National Democratic Convention of 1892.

In view of the universal decrease in the price of all products of labor in this State and in the value of land and all other property, we believe that justice demands a material reduction in the public expenditures, notwithstanding the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. We adhere to the position of the last Democratic Congress in favor of an income tax, or, if necessary, of amending the Constitution of the United States so as to obviate the objections of the Supreme Court.

NO GAG LAW WANTED IN THIS STATE.

The poll tax is an illogical and undemocratic tax. It falls chiefly on wage-earners, out of whose wages it is withheld, while other classes of citizens generally escape or evade it. Therefore we demand section 12 of the article on revenue and taxation in the State Constitution be repealed, and our candidates for the State Legislature are pledged to advocate such amendment.

We condemn any attempt to override the will of the people, as expressed in the amendment to the law of contempt, enacted by the Legislature of 1891, and to set up the monstrous non-American doctrine that Courts possess an inherent right to summarily punish their critics for contempt, though not committed in the immediate presence of the Court while in session, nor tending to actually interfere with its proceedings, thus depriving a citizen of his inalienable constitutional right to a fair and impartial trial by jury. We proclaim our unfaltering adherence to the principle of free speech and a free press, and denounce all insidious attempts of returning tyranny to gag the one or shackle the other.

ENDORSE THEIR EFFORTS.

We indorse the action of Commissioners LaRue and Stanton in their efforts to equalize and reduce fares and freights, and point with pride to their manly stand in behalf of the producers of California.

Resolved, That the Democrats of California appreciate the noble efforts of that fearless patriot and statesman, Senator J. T. Morgan, of Alabama, for his able and indefatigable struggle in the interest of the Pacific Coast and the Nation.

MINERAL LAND BILL.

Resolved, That we are in favor of the mineral land bill passed by the last Congress, and we denounce the conduct of those whose action prevents it becoming a law.

FOR GOOD ROADS.

The Democratic Party of the State of California, appreciating the fact that good roads are destined to be an important factor in the development of the resources of our State, in that they facilitate the interchange of products and tend to bind together all sections, and recognizing, further, that the movement having in view the establishment of a system of properly constructed highways has become one of national importance, we pledge ourselves to the earnest support of such legislative action as will bring about this plan of internal improvement.

ADMIRATION FOR CLEVELAND.

While we may not agree with President Cleveland in his financial policy, we recognize in him a faithful follower of Jefferson and Jackson. He has raised the party above jingoism and has given the country a strong foreign policy. He has said to England: "Thus far shalt thou go and no further." He is worthy of the admiration of every Democrat, and we heartily endorse his administration while we differ from him in his financial policy.

Resolved, That we are proud to record the fact that the present Democratic administration in the State of California has accomplished more for the cause of labor than any previous administration; that many of the evils and hardships to which the working classes have been subjected have been removed and abolished through the intervention of the Department of Labor; that the said classes have had a department administered in a careful and just manner to which they have carried their grievances to the end that the wrongs and impositions upon them have found speedy redress without fear or favor; and be it further

Resolved, That the Democratic Party, representing the large majority affected by the domination of capital upon defenseless labor, pledges itself and its standard-bearers to continue in the good work of assisting and protecting those hampered by the tyrannical acts of capital monopoly; that it is the sense of this convention that labor be placed upon the plane to which it is entitled; that legislative action be had and the laws of the State so framed and enforced that full an adequate protection be extended to its laboring classes where the same is now lacking.

Application for a Patent.

U. S. LAND OFFICE,
INDEPENDENCE, CAL.,
June 24 1896.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, that David C. Lane, whose post-office address is Pomona, Los Angeles County, California, has this day filed his application for a patent for 1281 linear feet of the Last Chance Mine No. 2 mine or vein, bearing gold, silver and lead, with surface ground 594.7 feet in width on the West end, and on the East end 777.2 feet in width, situated in Coso Mining District, County of Inyo, and State of California and designated by the field-notes and official plat on file in this office as Lots Number 37 and 45 in Township 19 South, Range 40 and 41 East of Mount Diablo Meridian, said Lots Nos. 37 and 45 being as follows:

Ben. T. Williams and Max Skinner arrived from Mojave last Tuesday morning. They were summoned as witnesses in the case of the People vs. Robinson. They report that portion of the country very lively, particularly the new mining camp of Randsburg, where four stages are run daily from Mojave. They will return to-day.

They "Needed" the Old Man.

Governor Bradley, of Kentucky, received in his mail the other day a letter from the wife of a convict, making a tearful appeal for the pardon of her husband. The principal ground for her application for the pardon is included in the close of her letter, which makes the following remarkable statement: "Now, dear Governor, please let my husband come home to his wife and little children. We need him. He has one little child four years old and another two years old, and has never seen either of them."

Curative Properties of Our Springs.

The San Francisco News Letter of June 6th contains the following:

Ex-Senator Patrick Reddy never tires of detailing the manifold beauties of the country around Independence, Inyo County. To be sure that little village is so far out of the world that it is generally considered inaccessible to any living creature having less stamina than a Rocky Mountain pack mule, and its very existence is sometimes questioned, but there is where Mr. Reddy spent the best years of his life.

"Yes sir," says he, "you can stand in the streets of Independence, almost baking with the intense heat, and look up 10,000 feet into the regions of perpetual snow. A day's climb and you are in a freezing climate."

It makes no difference that the ordinary mortal does not care to bake or freeze. The Senator will not permit that fact to detract an iota from the enthusiasm with which he describes it.

"And they have the most wonderful hot mineral spring there that I ever heard of," continues Mr. Reddy. "It is an infallible cure for rheumatism. I have seen men so crippled up that their limbs were tied in bow knots and they had to be carried to the spring in a blanket, and after wallowing in the hot mud for a week go away turning somersaults up the road

"One man came in there on an old gray horse, and it was hard to tell which was in the worse condition. The man had rheumatism and the horse had spavin, ring bone, wind galls, and was knee sprung. The old man camped near the spring, and snoozed away the days in the warm mud like a hog, while the old horse waded around and nipped the grass. Two weeks later the man was cured, and when he started home the horse ran away with him. The brute had waded around in the mud till he had cured all of his ailments, and thought he was a three-year-old again. Fact."

The Baxter Party.

A few days ago invitations were sent out by Mr. and Mrs. Baxter to their friends of Independence and the neighborhood requesting their presence at the welcome-home party to be given in honor of their eldest son, Mr. Clifford Baxter. The young gentleman has been attending school in Berkeley during the past year and in company with Mr. Arthur Shepherd and Mr. O. C. Harper has just returned home for the summer vacation. In response to the invitations there was a grand gathering at the Baxter residence on Tuesday evening. The house is a large one and the upstairs portion not being partitioned as yet, an excellent dance hall is formed. It is doubtful if another house in the county affords such a fine accommodation for devotees of Terpsichore. Mr. Matlack and his daughter, Edna, Mr. Felix Meysan and Mrs. Webb kindly furnished the music, and with Dr. J. D. Blair as floor manager the ball was started about 9 o'clock and kept rolling, or rather hopping, until nearly 3 in the morning. Ice cream and cake was served about midnight. Miss Jennie Baxter, who looked charming in a gown of pink silk, with tuberoses in her hair, assisted her mother in receiving the guests. All present join in declaring this the social event of the season and in wishing young Clifford a bright and successful future in his chosen calling.

From Aberdeen.

The many friends of Mrs. I. H. Callaway will be shocked to hear of her sudden death, which occurred on Monday, the 22nd inst., at the home of her sister in Washington. Mrs. Callaway came to Aberdeen last November, and though her stay was short, she made many friends who mourn her untimely decease. The bereaved husband has the sincere sympathy of all.

"There is no Death! what seems so is transition;
This life of Mortal Breath
Is but a Suburb of the life elysian,
Whose portal we call Death."

Last Saturday the citizens of Aberdeen held a meeting at Taboose school house to consider the pros and cons of building a bridge across the river. They arrived at no decision, and adjourned to meet again next Saturday.

MERRY MEDICINE WAR.

Chicago Druggists to Make Patent Cures of Their Own.

A factory for making remedies similar in nature to the proprietary medicines now on the market is to be started in Chicago by retail druggists. A large majority of the pharmacists are interested, and they hope to drive the medicine makers from the field.

The retail druggists have formed the United States Pharmaceutical company and have issued stock to the amount of $20,000. Almost all of this has been taken up by prominent pharmacists.

The formation of the company was the outgrowth of a recommendation made by the Illinois Pharmacists' association. The members of that association said that nothing could be done to check the cutting in prices, and that druggists must enter the field as manufacturers. As a result 250 of the retailers of Chicago met and formed a company. In two weeks more than 250 Chicago names have been added to those of the organizers, and from the state at large 100 more have come.

Their object is to fight in a practical way the cutting of prices of drugs and medicines handled by department stores and to combat at the same time the sale of medicines by the manufacturers and wholesale dealers to these stores.

Hereafter when a person wants a dose to cure a headache and asks for the remedy usually taken the druggist will advise him to take something not only "just as good," but scientifically better, because it has been compounded by a committee of physicians and druggists of the highest reputation. The same thing will be told the man who wants a blood purifier or a plaster.

CHANGES AT HARVARD.

Vote by the Faculty to Reduce Length of Study In the College.

For two weeks there has been a sharp debate in the Harvard faculty on the proposition to reduce the course of study in the college from four to three years. The Sun reporter learned on the best authority that some action was taken at the last faculty meeting, and President Eliot, when asked concerning the matter, admitted that fact. He said the faculty had voted by a small majority to reduce the number of courses required for a degree from 18 to 15, and that the idea was that any man who had passed 12 of the 15 courses with credit should receive his degree.

This means a three years' course for the college and a dissolution of all the class lines and class feeling. The majority in favor of the motion, however, was so small that the vote was not considered final. The scheme will have to be approved by the corporation and board of overseers before it can go into effect. Members of the faculty who opposed the plan think that the action would be a mistake and predict that if it passes favorably it will bring on a storm of indignation from graduates.—New York Sun.

SAVED BY THE GIRLS.

New Jersey Skater Rescued by Female Heroism and Originality.

John Mitchell, a well known young man, broke through the ice while skating on Speedwell lake near Morristown, N. J. The water was deep and cold, and Mitchell screamed for help as he struggled for life. Several young women who witnessed the accident went to his assistance and by prompt and original plans began a scheme to rescue him.

Several excited young men skated up intent on brave deeds, full of suggestions, but devoid of plans. The young women pushed them out of the way without ceremony and set about to work out Mitchell's salvation by their own methods. Two of the girls lay down on the ice and the others held on their dresses while they reached into the water and seized the drowning man by the arms. Considerable vigorous pulling resulted in bringing Mitchell out upon the stronger ice, where he soon recovered his breath and went home to thaw out.—New York Recorder.

THE DOLL THAT GREW.

Two children sat in a window low,
Where graceful vines ever loved to creep,
A cradle swinging, now fast now slow,
Rocking a doll to sleep.

His chubby face and his ringlets brown,
Her laughing eyes and her dimples fair—
A sunbeam, lost in the vines, looked down
Glinting her yellow hair.

I said, "Goodby, happy ones, goodby;
E'er I come back, little girl and boy,
Your laugh will fade to a common sigh,
Mocking this childish joy."

Their eyes looked grave, for a moment's thought,
But could not take in the meaning cold.
She shook her head till his brown crown caught
Showers of curling gold.

"When you come back, me will be so tall,"
He said, "and proud." "Yes, me will," said she.
"The doll will grow, and the cradle—all,
Lovely as they can be."

And far away in the world of tide,
In dreams and fancies that picture fair—
The girl's sweet faith and the boy's glad pride—
Followed me everywhere.

Ah, could it stay, could it always be!
But each joy falls with a broken wing;
Then night comes on, and it cannot see,
Moaning, it cannot sing.

With years of winter upon my head,
With years of summer upon my face,
I came, by haunting desire led,
Back to the self same place.

The same sun struggled and wandered through,
And glinted ringlets of brown and gold;
The doll had grown, and the cradle, too,
Lovelier than of old.

The two still sat in the window low,
Their hearts so full of a love so deep—
A cradle swinging, so soft and slow,
Rocking their child to sleep.

A MEAN REVENGE.

"Sam! Sam! Sam! Where the deuce is that fellow?"

I had rung the bell until I was tired and out of patience, and then called for him until I was out of breath, and still he did not come.

If you want to know who I am, allow me to inform you that my name is George Boomerang, better known in Frazedona, where I reside, as Captain Boomerang, late of the army. I am a man of considerable wealth, own the finest house in town and keep, or did keep, a man by the name of Sam, whose duty it was to brush my clothes, hat and boots and adjust my leg.

I refer to a wooden leg. The original leg ran against a cannon ball during our late unpleasantness, and I have never seen it since.

Well, it was Sam's duty to take that wooden leg off at night and to be on hand in the morning to put it on before I got out of bed, and now you know why I was yelling, "Sam! Sam! Sam!"

And when I inform you that this was the morning of my wedding day perhaps you can imagine how anxious I was to get on to my legs as soon as possible.

"Yes, ma'am, I was the lucky fellow that had walked into the affections—on a wooden leg too—of the handsomest girl in Frazedona and was that day to lead her to the altar. But I must get my leg on first, and, as Sam wouldn't or couldn't come, I rolled out of bed and went hopping around on one foot to find my leg.

Now, my dear reader, when the surgeon trimmed my stump after that little affair with the cannon ball he sawed it off uncommonly short, so perhaps you can faintly imagine my feeling when, after hopping around my room, I found what I supposed to be my leg, but, upon attempting to adjust it, discovered that it was intended to go on below the knee.

"Do wooden legs shrink? That's just what I want to know," said I. And then I rang the bell and called "Sam!"

Well, Samuel didn't come, but my housekeeper, Mrs. Bloom, did.

"Mrs. Bloom," I cried, "where is Sam?"

She answered me through the keyhole of the door. "He left the house last night about 11 o'clock. Took his trunk with him, and said he was going to leave town by the midnight train."

I couldn't understand it at first. I had always used Sam well, paid him good wages, and he had seemed perfectly contented with his situation, and served me faithfully until now.

Suddenly an idea struck me, and the whole cause of Sam's perfidy was revealed to me.

"By heavens, it is Slympkins!" I yelled. "Slympkins is the cause of all my woe. He bribed Sam to steal my leg on this my wedding day and leave this insufficient prop in place of it."

Jim Slympkins is or was my rival. He is the only son of his father, who, by the way, is the most wealthy gentleman in Frazedona. Consequently Jim doesn't do anything but smoke cigars, drive round town behind his splendid grays, and devote himself to the ladies generally.

I rather had the advantage of Slympkins. To be sure, Slympkins had or was expecting to have much more wealth than I could boast of, but he hadn't my face, you know, or anything like it.

I was sorry for Slmypkins, but, hang it, my dear sir, what could I do? If he had chosen Miss Short, Miss Ginx, Miss Broad, or, in fact, any one but Miss Amelia Seymour, it would have been well. But it was really absurd for Slympkins to suppose that I would allow him or any other man to marry Amelia—at least while I had a wooden leg.

I would have given Slympkins anything in reason, but it was truly ridiculous for him to think that I would give him Amelia. I told her so, and then I folded her to my breast, and she folded me to her breast, and I allowed her to sip the honey from my ruby lips.

Yes, I had won her, and poor Slympkins was fairly wild with rage. He had sworn to be revenged, but I laughed at his threats.

I was seated at the breakfast table sipping my coffee half an hour afterward when Mrs. Bloom came running in, crying:

"Oh, captain, I know all about it!"

"What, the leg?"

"Yes, I think so. My daughter Eliza says she saw Mr. Slympkins give Sam some money last night."

"Yes, I know it was Slympkins."

"More than that. Sam was married last night to Miss Seymour's maid, and they went off together by the 12 o'clock train."

"But, my dear woman," said I, "I don't care anything about whom he has married or where he has gone. The question is, Has he carried my leg with him?"

"Why, I'm sure I don't know."

"Well, that is just what I want to know, ma'am. This isn't a time for trifling. You must remember that I am to be married today, and, by Jove! I want my leg!"

"Why don't you ask Slympkins for it?"

"Yes, and be laughed at. No, I don't intend to let him know anything about the trouble he has caused me. Besides I don't know that he has got it."

"But what are you going to do?"

"Why, just as soon as I finish my breakfast I shall go to Mr. Seymour's and tell him of the perfidy of my servant—and I shall take that leg to prove my statement—and, unless he objects very strongly, I shall insist on being married upon crutches rather than to have the wedding postponed. That would please Slympkins too much. It's what he expects, but I'll disappoint him, by Jove!"

I finished my coffee, and going to my chamber I took the ownerless leg, and wrapped it up in paper. Then I came down, and ordering my carriage rode out to Mr. Seymour's residence.

The old gentleman met me at the door. He took no notice of my crutches. With averted face he bade me goodmorning and led me into the parlor.

"I'm sorry, Captain Boomerang, very sorry, but the wedding will have to be postponed."

"What, not on my account, I hope?" for you see I thought he had already heard of my loss.

"Amelia is"—

"What? My dear Amelia! Oh, has anything happened to her. Is she ill?"

"It's nothing serious, my dear captain."

"But is she ill? Oh, where is she? Let me go to her. Do let me see her!"

"She's in her boudoir. Go. Perhaps you can comfort her."

I did go. I burst into the room and found her lying on the sofa.

I rushed forward to clasp her in my arms, but recoiled in surprise and amazement when I saw upon the chair in front of the lounge upon which she was lying my—

"Great heavens! Amelia, where did you get my leg?" For you see I recognized the limb instantly.

"The le— Oh, George Henry, I—I—can never be your wife!" she sobbed, fixing her liquid orbs on the limb before her.

"But where did you get my leg?" I reiterated, at the same time unfolding the paper from the short one that I had brought with me.

"Where did you get mine?" she screamed, hopping up from the lounge and clutching the limb that I still held in my hand.

"Yours!" I gasped.

"Mine!"

"Oh, this is too much!"

Amelia sat down, too, and for about two minutes we gazed into one another's faces without speaking a word. At last I spoke.

"Oh, Amelia, Slympkins has played a cruel joke upon us! He bribed your maid and my man to change these limbs."

"Yes, and now"—

"But luckily we have found it out in time, and now the wedding can go on as if nothing had happened."

"What! Would you marry me now?"

"Now!" I cried clasping her to my breast. "I'd marry you now if you hadn't a leg to stand upon."

Then I kissed the dear creature, while she laid her beautiful head upon my breast and cried for joy.

In conclusion I am happy to inform the reader that the wedding took place at precisely 2 o'clock that day. Slympkins was not there, and I haven't seen him since, but when I do see him—well, I'll write you about it.—Tit-Bits.

Colder Than the North Pole.

Walter Wellman, who has been to the arctic regions himself, says that Melville's theory of an eternal ocean ice cap is as indefensible as the old notion of an open polar sea. At the pole the mean annual temperature is reckoned at 2 degrees F. above zero. In summer it is doubtless often so warm there that the lucky explorer who reaches its neighborhood will pull at his sledge with bare hands and without any coat to incumber him. During three months of summer the mercury would not fall below 10 degrees above zero. He might pass a whole winter there without seeing the mercury drop any lower than it occasionally falls in Manitoba and northern Minnesota. But he would find a steadier cold. For three months, probably, he would have no higher temperature than 20 degrees below.

Arctic climate, like many other things in that region, is little understood by people who have not given the subject special study. In that country it is always cold when the wind blows, summer or winter. But even in winter, when the wind is light or still, a well clad man can move about in comfort.

When Congress Will Adjourn.

It is now considered pretty well settled this congress will do nothing but pass the appropriation bills and go home. There is no reason why it should not conclude its labors by the middle of May and give every one a chance to go to the national conventions and all the statesmen an opportunity to spend the entire summer at home looking after their political fences. Speaker Reed is confident congress will quit before June 1.—Walter Wellman in Chicago Times-Herald.

An All Night Scare.

Young Englishmen visiting the United States have as many absurd and amusing experiences as Americans have when in foreign countries. The Washington Star tells of an English traveler who had been assured that west of the Missouri river the entire country was infested with bears, some of which were so bold that they came into the towns.

He stopped in a Kansas village, and in the evening started out for a walk. The stores were closed, but the moon was shining brightly. He rambled about the place for a couple of hours, and started down the business street for the hotel. Suddenly he saw before him on the sidewalk a big bear, sitting on its haunches, with open mouth and paws extended, awaiting his coming.

In a moment he was on top of a porch, crying for help, but no one heard him, and the bear sat and watched him. All night long he staid there, trembling for fear bruin would climb the post, but comforting himself with the idea that it was too small to be used by a bear.

At daybreak some men came along, and one of them wheeled the bear back to the doorway with the remark, "I wonder who put that sign in the middle of the walk."

The tourist descended from the porch without detection, and had he not subsequently enjoyed the story so much that he told it himself it would never have been known.

Fog Horns.

In a communication to the French Academy of Sciences an explanation is given of some of the hitherto unaccountable phenomena pertaining to gor horns. It has been found in regard to acoustic signals, or sirens, that they are surrounded by a neutral zone in which the sound is not heard at the sea level—a zone more or less distant, according to the height of the siren on the coast—and it has a mean width of about 8,400 feet. On the nearer side of this zone the sound is of course heard perfectly, but when it is traversed the sound weakens gradually until it becomes scarcely perceptible, when it increases again, and, on the zone being left behind, the sound resumes its full intensity. Experiments have been made on this line with a steam vessel, by causing it to approach or recede from a lightship in different directions and in a straight line. In each course, according to the account published, the sound was deadened almost completely in a zone whose central line was about 15,000 feet from the siren.

He Wanted to Be Prepared.

Johnny—Father, don't you think I had better drop all my studies at school except arithmetic?

Father—Certainly not, my boy. What would you do that for?

Johnny—Why, I heard mother say that you would be a horrible example for me some day, and I thought I'd better get posted up!—Detroit Free Press.

EDEN'S FLOWERS AND THORNS.

In this beautiful season of flowering green, when the air is balmy and the sunlight golden, it seems a pity that anything should enter into this Eden of ours to mar its pleasures and blight its joy, but so it is ordained; man has his heritage, and it is even doubtful if all of life were a scene of pleasure—whether we could possibly enjoy it. The birds come and sing, and the birds sing and go. Rheumatism comes also. It comes from exposure to the dampness of the nights and mornings, to the sudden change of temperature, and it certainly goes, as thousands know, by the prompt use of St. Jacobs Oil, which is a complete and perfect cure. It is well, therefore, while we enjoy all these seasonable delights, not to be without this great remedy for pain, and to have it ready, more because we are the more liable at this season than any other to suffer from such attacks.

"The trees are leaving," remarked Mrs. Snaggs. "Nevertheless, they are not packing their trunks," replied Mr. Snaggs, who objected to his wife's coined verb.

THE ROCK OF GIBRALTAR

Is not steadier than a system liberated from the shackles of chills and fever, bilious remittent or dumb ague by Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, a perfect antidote to malarial poison in air or water. It is also an unexampled remedy for bilious, rheumatic or kidney complaints, dyspepsia and nervousness. It improves appetite and sleep and hastens convalescence.

"Little boy, what are you crying about?" "'Cause I had fi' cents an' I got a glass o' s dy water, an' it's all gone; an' if I'd got a nickel's wurth o' candy I'd bin a eatin' yet."

BEWARE OF OINTMENTS FOR CATARRH THAT CONTAIN MERCURY,

as mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is ten fold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internally, and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co. Testimonials free.

BE A WELL WOMAN!

Only One Remedy that Will Make You So--Paine's Celery Compound!

Why not be a well woman this spring?

There are women who cannot tolerate the smallest neglect about the house who too often take no care of their health,

They should use these precious spring days for getting strong and well by taking Paine's celery compound—the greatest of all spring remedies.

Miss Elsie M. Brown of 2 Leeds St., Dorchester, Mass., whose picture is given above, wrote the 5th of this month as follows:

"Four or five years ago, I suffered with dreadful pains in my back (owing to my kidneys), so much so that night after night I could not close my eyes, and what few hours sleep I did get, I could be heard moaning and tossing, showing that even in my sleep, I suffered pain. At times I would have more pain than usual over my left hip, and when waking in the morning it would be all I could do to stretch my limb down straight, as there would be a drawing and trembling of the cords. Beside such torture, I began to bloat a great deal.

"After suffering for some time, a friend advised me to try Paine's celery compound. I can truthfully say that after using four bottles I was cured; not helped, but cured."

If you have any doubt at all these spring days about your health—if neuralgic twinges, kidney troubles, dizzy spells, indigestion or heart palpitation show themselves, don't wait for plainer warnings. Make a clean sweep of all these ailments from the system.

It is easiest to do this now, as spring is approaching. Take Paine's celery compound when the system is most responsive to its cleansing, strengthening influence.

An improved appetite, sound digestion, uninterrupted sleep, and an energetic condition, are the result of taking Paine's celery compound.

A RED CROSS KNIGHT.

The crimson glow of sunlight falls
Along the monumental walls
Where still in faded pomp are read
The name and virtues of the dead.
Yet from yon effigy of knight
The graven name has vanished quite.
No word remains, but stories tell
That he who sleeps fought true and well;
In kindness swift, in vengeance slow,
A constant friend, a courteous foe,
Who partly fought for love of fight,
But chiefly for the love of right.
To Holy Land he rode away;
Seek thou a holy land today.
With sword and battleax he strove;
Seek thou the armory of love.
He won on earth a poor renown;
Win thou on earth love's fadeless crown.
—Arthur L. Salmon in Gentleman's Magazine.

THE BROKEN KEY.

The young and pretty bride felt worried and out of sorts. Only a short eight weeks ago she had married her dear Gus and had followed him to his home in W., and already he had begun to neglect her, to go out of an evening, and to leave her alone in the big house. He had tried to convince her that he could not altogether neglect his former friends and companions, and that she ought not to object to his meeting them on two evenings every week, and to pass an agreeable hour or two in their company over a friendly game of whist, but she simply did not comprehend how he could enjoy himself without her, how he could even think of going anywhere without taking her along.

"Oh, the dreadful evenings I have to spend," she complained, with tears in her eyes. "I am obliged to sit here all alone because I have as yet had no chance to form any acquaintances here. Naturally I get homesick. Often I feel like leaving everything and taking the train home to my parents."

"Would it not be better, darling, if you went to bed instead and tried to sleep?"

"That is just where the trouble is," she replied, still in tears, "I am afraid. Our servant sleeps way up in the attic. She would not even hear were anything to happen to me."

"Why, you foolish child, what is there to be afraid of? What is going to happen?"

"Are not the papers every day full of burglaries and robberies?" she persisted. "Think of the many strangers that flock to a well known health resort like this. Nothing is impossible under such circumstances!"

The husband looked thoughtfully at his sweet bride.

"No, dear, I do not want you to frighten yourself into illness. I promise you herewith, of my own free will (the poor fellow could not help heaving a sigh as he said this) to return promptly at 11 o'clock whenever I go to meet my friends. It is impossible for me to withdraw myself from their society altogether, for they would ridicule and make fun of me, and call me henpecked. Burglars rarely put in their appearance before the hour of 11, the streets being full of life and traffic. Goodby, darling, and please do not feel lonesome."

Annie sighed and submitted resignedly to her fate. She read awhile; she then took up her embroidery, a present for her mother; she played a game of solitaire, and finally she paced restlessly up and down the room. At home there had been a large family circle; hence it was very trying to her to be left so much to herself in her new surroundings.

At 10 o'clock even the familiar noises in the kitchen ceased, for the servant had gone up stairs to her attic, and the poor woman felt the old feeling of distress and fright creep over her. The sitting room was located at the rear of the house, and there was a hallway between it and the front rooms. She therefore could not hear the usual noises. A death-like silence reigned in the room. Tired and yet excited, she threw herself on the lounge. She sadly reflected why beer houses and card parties had been called into existence. By and by her thoughts became more and more confused, and she fell into a sound slumber.

It was 11:05 o'clock when Gus arrived breathlessly and post haste at his house door and tried to fit his key into the lock.

Poor fellow! Had evil spirits conspired to get him into trouble? Click—the key broke in two, and the bit stuck fast in the keyhole, handle and barrel alone remaining in his hands.

He knocked, he called, he knocked again and louder—for unfortunately there was no house bell—all in vain. "I hardly think my wife has retired as early as this," he reflected, "but of course she is in the sitting room, and most likely she cannot hear me." Once more he knocked—this time very loud. He called until his voice was hoarse. No reply.

To fill his cup of misery to the brim it commenced to rain, and he was without an umbrella.

"Perhaps Annie has gone to bed, after all," he thought, shivering and dripping wet. "Shall I go to a hotel? No! What would the people think! The only place that I know of that may still be open is the railway depot, for there is a train arriving at midnight."

He went down the street in the pouring rain, and at last found himself in the waiting room of the station.

"A glass of beer, sir?" asked an enterprising waiter. Gus shook himself. He felt chilly. "Punch," he said, "and make it hot!" He drank one glass and then another, and still another, to while away the time. He was the only person there. In due time the last train had arrived, and he could stay no longer. They were about to close up.

In sheer desperation he looked at his watch.

It was 1 o'clock when he emerged into the street, and it had ceased to rain. The full moon seemed to grin and wink at him maliciously through the clouds, as though she meant to say: "See, old man, it serves you right! Why must you go out to play cards and leave your wife at home in loneliness?"

In spite of the repeated potations he still felt chilly. "There is no help for it but a good run," he said to himself, starting on a lively trot through the city, first down one street, then up another, through the suburbs, until he reached the open country, and back again without stop or rest for fear of catching cold.

The town clock struck the hour of 4. "It is still too early to get into the house," he said. "The front door is never unlocked before 6 o'clock! Will they be able to unlock the door anyway? A piece of my key sticks in the lock. The women are imprisoned and cannot get out. But now I can stand this no longer. I must have something hot to drink and sit down somewhere. There is a train at 4 o'clock." And forthwith he once more wended his way to the railroad depot.

A snug corner and a cup of hot coffee somewhat restored him. But he was very tired, and pretty soon he was as sound asleep in his corner as his wife had been the night before on her lounge.

And how did his wife fare? She awoke in the middle of the night with a start, almost frightened out of her wits by a horrid dream, in which her husband had appeared before her, wounded, bleeding and torn by huge bloodhounds. Pretty soon, however, she comprehended the situation. Her face bathed in tears, she paced restlessly up and down the room wringing her hands. "Oh, the wretch! To stay out all night! Just to think of it! Such a man has the effrontery to talk to me of love. Not content to act like a villain, he even had to make fun of me last night by pretending he would henceforth be home at 11 o'clock. Who would ever have thought him so base? They close the beer house after midnight; hence he cannot pretend to be playing cards there all night. Heaven only knows where he is spending the night, in whose company he is enjoying himself, while I—but he'll find that I am not his dupe. I shall leave him at once. There is a train at 7 o'clock in the morning, which I am going to take and go home to my parents."

At 5 o'clock she called the serving maid, whom she sent to the garret for a valise, and commenced to pack. The maid said nothing, but she was surprised that her master had not risen and did not help his wife. However, she made the coffee and then went after a cab.

The front door was wide open and a locksmith busy with the big lock when Annie appeared in the hall. The landlady ran to meet her, exclaiming in a flurry of excitement: "Did you hear about it, madam? A thief was here last night and made an attempt to enter the house. Some one must have frightened him off. He left a broken key stuck fast in the lock, and was unable to unlock the door. I had to call from the window until I aroused a neighbor, who ran for a locksmith. Now I am going to have a patent lock put on and spoil their little game. But you look very pale, my dear madam. I am sorry to have frightened you with my burglar story. Are you going to take a ride so early in the morning?"

Annie nodded and passed on. She was glad that the woman had not seen her valise, which her maid had already put into the cab.

"What a narrow escape I had last night! How near I came being robbed—perhaps worse!" She was now thoroughly angry. "So much more reason for leaving the fellow, no matter what the consequences! For the present I shall remain with my parents." Thus musing she arrived at the depot.

Before purchasing her ticket she intended to leave her valise in the waiting room. Annie entered and made for an empty table, when suddenly she dropped the valise and almost screamed aloud. Wasn't that her husband, "her" Gus sitting there in a corner and snoring loud enough to make everybody in the room smile at his nasal powers? He looked tired and worn and his garments appeared damp. How did he get here and why was he in such a dilapidated condition? She stood for a moment undecided and unable to take her eyes off his drawn, wornout features.

Suddenly the sleeper opened his eyes. Whatever the outcome, she must avoid a scene in a public room. Anything but that! The waiters had more than once looked wonderingly at the man who had drunk three cups of coffee and then fallen sound asleep hours ago. Annie tried to appear quite unconcerned, and took a seat beside her husband. Somehow her anger had suddenly vanished.

"Oh, darling, what brought me—I mean rather what brought you—here?" he asked, astonished at the unexpected appearance of his wife, dressed for a journey.

"Never mind, dear. Don't bother about that now," she whispered. "Come, let us ride home, where I will explain all."

Gus acquiesced in silence. His feet felt heavy and hardly able to carry his weight. He was sick. All he could do was to drag himself to a cab.

And then explanations were in order. Annie had no reason to doubt her husband's narration of his adventures during the night, and what the landlady had told her about the broken key tended to corroborate and exonerate him. But he could not quite make out from her explanations what had taken her to the railway station. He was, however, too ill to ask many questions.

Arrived at home, she simply told the astonished servant that "they had changed their mind and would not go away because her husband, who had preceded her to the depot, had been suddenly taken sick," and sent her after a physician.

Gus was very sick. For two weeks he could not leave his bed. A complicated and aggravated attack of influenza was the result of his experience during that ill fated night.

Annie never left his bedside, and now it was her great care and tireless, devoted nursing that opened his eyes as to the depth and unselfishness of her great love for him.

At last Gus got well, and, though he would now and then go to have a social game of whist, his wife never again doubted him, even if he staid out later than 11.—From the German.

SOME QUEER YARNS.

GATHERED BY THE SOCIETY FOR PSYCHICAL RESEARCH.

The Phantom of a Gloved Hand—Explanation of the Coffin on the Lake Shore. Several Strange Prophecies and Warnings—Investigates the Yarns.

A diligent hunt has been made for years after stories of telepathy, mind reading, second sight, clairvoyance, crystal vision, and so on, by the Society For Psychical Research, and great pains have been taken to obtain corroboration if possible.

One of the most experienced and indefatigable investigators in that organization, Frederic W. H. Myers, embodies scores of these narratives in a paper printed in the report of the proceedings of the Society For Psychical Research. A few are selected for reproduction here to illustrate some of the supposed workings of the mysterious faculty in question.

D. J. Parsons, a physician in Sweet Springs, Mo., says he discovered years ago that he was able to see things, mentally, which had happened hundreds of miles away and many years before. He wrote in 1891: "While in company with Dr. Trotter of Lexington, Mo., I could see before and near to him a delicate hand on which was a dark red kid glove. The hand was all the time in motion. I called his attention to it, and he was much surprised. I told him the hand had a history, and if he had no objections I would be pleased to know it. He said: 'I was traveling in Canada on the cars, and one day we ran up to a train that had been wrecked a little while before. I went to the wreck, and about the first thing that I saw was a young lady lying upon the ground dead. One hand was naked, and one was covered with a dark red kid glove.' Instantly upon his uttering the words the dark red kid glove and the hand vanished."

Subsequently the Dr. Trotter here mentioned sent a full account of the accident and the conversation with Dr. Parsons to an officer of the Psychical Research society in reply to inquiries. He corroborated the foregoing story fully, adding that the gloved hand made a strong impression on him, "which has remained to this day, about 40 years." He was astounded at Dr. Parsons' remark to him nearly 30 years after the event, and even yet cannot understand how that person should have broached the subject, inasmuch as Dr. Trotter had never to his knowledge mentioned the sight of the dead girl to a living soul.

A large group of incidents found in this collection occurred almost exactly at the same time when the "percipient" received a corresponding impression. Shipwrecks, more trifling accidents, the recovery of a lost dog and the position in which a watch that had been dropped in a hayfield a few hours before still lay were paralleled by vision, either in sleep or a half waking condition. Thus, on the morning of Oct. 7, 1885, the wife of a Chicago man asked him, while they were both dressing and before either of them had left their sleeping room, if he had ever known a person named Esdale. He replied in the negative. Then she narrated a dream in which she saw a coffin on the lake shore so marked. Later in the day the man discovered in the morning paper of that date an account of the disappearance of William E. Esdaile, but with no theory as to his fate. After elaborate inquiry it seems to be established that this was the first public mention of the fact that he was missing. For several days the Chicago papers referred to the topic, but suggested that he was alive, but insane, and would be found. The notion of suicide was scouted. On Oct. 10 Esdaile's dead body was found. He had been drowned.

Visions, dreams or impressions which seemed to be prophetic figure frequently in Mr. Myers' catalogue. Occasionally there would be only a vague impulse or sensation. A railway engineer stopped his train, he could not say why, and sent a flagman ahead. He thus stopped an express train coming toward him and on the same track, but out of sight around a curve. Having landed in a strange city, a man was picking his way along in the dark, when he was impelled to change his route abruptly. He found next day that a few more steps would have thrown him off a dock. A father's anxiety about a son in another part of the country increased to such a point that the family had just decided to summon the boy home when the news of his death was received.

Again, of the prefigured events some were only a few seconds away, others perhaps months distant. A naturalist would discover, without search or suspicion, exceedingly rare ferns or moths almost instantly after an image of the specimen was found in his mind or a hint was whispered in his ear by some unseen agency. Accidents, and even deaths, were predicted weeks in advance, and sometimes on a specified date, and the forecast was fulfilled. A man dreamed of seeing the headstone of his own grave inscribed "Jun. 9." As the word "June" is seldom abbreviated, he believed that this was meant for "Jan. 9." Soon afterward one of his children died on June 9, and he considered this occurrence a fulfillment of the supposed prophecy. However, he died himself several years afterward on Jan. 9.

The experts who have undertaken the study of the phenomena here described are eagerly looking for more stories of this sort. Dr. Richard Hodgson, 5 Boylston place, Boston, is the American secretary and treasurer of the Society For Psychical Research, and when he gets hold of a new yarn he proceeds to investigate the matter carefully before reporting the facts to headquarters in London.—New York Tribune.

Dentists in Vienna are forming a society which has for its object a course of mutual instruction in light anecdotes and pleasing conversation for professional hours.

BEAUTY AND PHILOSOPHY.

A Handsome Young Woman Who Is Keeping Up the Family Record.

The manifest advantage of a young woman doctor of philosophy is that she does not abdicate her right to be a pretty girl. Such is Miss Elizabeth Hotchkiss, the daughter of our consul at Ottawa, and who when at Washington was regarded as one of the handsomest women in that city.

Miss Hotchkiss is a graduate of Elmira college, and, in addition to her degree of B. A., received from Cornell university her Ph. D. She is now only 25 years old and is the youngest doctor of philosophy in the country. For some time Miss Hotchkiss was editor of The Metaphysical Magazine, published in St. Louis. This magazine is not as well known as the New York magazines, nor are its stories as vivacious and thrilling, but it is read by many learned men, and Miss Hotchkiss, who has now resigned the position, held an honorable place as its editor and one to be filled by few men or women.

MISS ELIZABETH HOTCHKISS.

This young lady comes from a metaphysical family. Her great-grandfather on her mother's side was a Scotch metaphysician, and the Hotchkiss family in the past have been editors, lawyers and in professions which require some of the subtleties of speech.

Daughters of Presidents.

Presidents' daughters are quite numerously in evidence in Washington just now. Among those in attendance at recent social functions in Washington Mrs. Sartoris, Mrs. Stanley Brown and Mrs. McKee, daughters respectively of Presidents Grant, Garfield and Harrison, have been conspicuous. To this list of presidents' daughters in Washington the name of Mrs. Semple, daughter of President Tyler, should be added. Mrs. Semple is and has been for a number of years an inmate of the Louise home, the ideal retreat for aged women which Washington owes to the generosity of W. W. Corcoran, who founded and named it in memory of his wife and daughter. Ill health and advancing age have long prevented Mrs. Semple from taking part in social festivities, but her mind is clear, her memory unimpaired, her intellect vigorous, her knowledge of the history of the country deep and comprehensive. It is not strange, therefore, that this representative of a period long gone by should not be the least interesting of this quartet of women who at different times have lived in the White House.—Washington Letter.

Thankful For Daughters.

Miss Harriet Keyser, the well known suffragist speaker of New York, says that the other day her German shoemaker remarked to her: "Do you know I am very thankful that I have only one son; that three of my children are daughters? I must be always paying my boy's debts, but my girls all work and bring their earnings to me to help along. I don't see what I would do if I had another son to worry me." As Miss Keyser justly observes, how different this speech is from the old notion that daughters were to be taken care of, and that a son was a blessing sought much more than the merely tolerated girl!

A Scotch Postwoman.

Miss Catherine Horsley is a rural postwoman, whose beat is from Longniddry to Seton castle, in Scotland. She holds an established appointment, dated Feb. 1, 1884, and has two good conduct stripes. The postmaster of Haddington, under whom she serves, informs St. Martin's-le-Grand that she gets through all the duties required of her with care, and with the confidence of her chief. She performs two rural deliveries, together with apparatus and station services.

She Prefers Madame.

Mme. Calve is an admirer of the American woman. "To know her is to want to be as she is," is her flattering verdict. Nevertheless she resents our unmusical title of miss and prefers to be known as madame. She has had no time for marriage, so she asserts, but is no longer youthful enough to be known as mademoiselle. In Europe the more dignified madame is conferred on ripening years, and Calve boldly declares she has won the right to its distinction.

No Gems Worn In France.

Gems seem to be worn less and less every year. With day toilets they are scarcely seen at all, and the fact was authoritatively illustrated the other day at the marriage of the daughter of Count d'Hansonville, which brought together all that is related to royalty in France. Scarcely a jewel was to be seen in this elegant assemblage. The bride wore not a single gem.

Some Clever Old Maids.

In literature the list of the unmarried is a long one. Among the noted names are Nora Perry, Rose Elizabeth Cleveland, sister of the president; Ouida, Jean Ingelow, Rosa Nouchette Cary, Anna Dickinson, Florence Nightingale, who has gained fame as a writer since she retired as a nurse; Grace Denio Litchfield, Edith Thomas and Susan Coolidge.

HAD MONEY TO WASH.

CURRENCY THAT SOMETIMES REQUIRES AN AMMONIA BATH.

A Fair Young New York Cashier's Plan, Which Includes an Increase of Salary. The Experience of a Young Actor and His Brilliant Wife.

The fair metropolitan cashier has added a new factor to her growing valuation which will not prove so desirable a wife in the eyes of her employer as the honesty and efficiency which have won for her almost a monopoly in the business. It is the result of the microbe craze, and is nothing less than washing all the money she handles and charging her employer overtime too.

The discoverer of this new way to enhance her usefulness and cost is Annie Nesmyth, the money taker of a big down town hotel. Miss Nesmyth serves at night mostly, and, while less money comes in then than in the day, she is generally kept busy enough. The money is often very dirty and to the last degree repulsive to handle. Now, the cashier is a trained nurse "resting" from her arduous professional labors. After a sick spell from handling the soiled currency she concluded to resign. She was persuaded not to by an increase of salary and permission to wash the money. So every night sees a soup plate of ammonia water at her elbow, into which each note, as it arrives, is dropped. It gets a quick bath and is then laid out on a piece of flannel to dry as tenderly as if it were her best piece of jewelry. The water has to be changed two or three times in a night.

The cashier recently had an offer of another similar job. Being asked what salary she wanted, she mentioned her usual figure, with the proviso that it must be so much more "if there's money to wash."

"Money to wash?" said the astonished would be employer. "Why, I haven't enough for my hides (he is a leather and tallow dealer), much less to wash."

"You see," she said calmly, "your business is dirty, and it's likely the money will be. I won't wash another fellow's money in ammonia water—it's bad for the hands and head—without a consideration in my salary. Different if it were my money!" She says she's "passing the tip along," and soon all merchants in a business that calls for an unusual fortitude in the olfactory and perceptive nerves will have to pay extra salaries if they wish to retain steady and efficient help.

A money washing episode which converted Charlie Bigelow, the actor, and his wife to a belief in banks is worth recording. By dint of great saving and denial the young couple got together $800 in the first year of their marriage. The money was kept in a chamois bag, which the wife strung around her waist under her corset, and as the fund was a great secret which both tried hard to forget, so that the well known borrowing propensities of their profession might not be excited, it was never touched or even looked at for months. But a run of bad luck finally drove the young folks to draw on the chamois bag, when to their intense dismay it was found the money had become perfectly illegible. One by one the eight $100 bills were laid on the bed, all in the same condition of greasy, uniform black green no color. Husband and wife took turns at trying to restore the attractive greenness of the filthy lucre, but in vain. The young wife wept; the saving husband raved. Then together they went to the bank which had given them the bills. The bank refused to recognize the money, nor could Manager Baker's indorsement make the cashier change his mind. The manager then took a $100 bill off their hands for friendship's sake and got a managerial friend to do likewise, trusting to their prominence to pass the notes. That was doing a good bit for the young folks, who had submitted to being called stingy many a time to gather the fund together.

The actor then left his wife at home weeping over the remaining $600, while he went down on the Rialto to sell it to any speculator at 50 cents for the dollar. But the wife was "no slouch" at expedients. As soon as he was gone she dried her tears and declared to the girl that, as the money was no good anyway, they would just experiment with it. The girl made strong ammonia water, and the mistress took some washing soap and soaked and soaped and washed those six bills as industriously behind locked doors as if she were perpetrating the regular handkerchief and hose wash in a fourth story room of a hotel where "laundry work in the rooms" was forbidden. Patience was rewarded. Rid of their slimy coating, the half dozen bills at last shone feebly out in a wan sort of alive greenness, touched up with brown, as if under the rays of a dying sunset. They looked like autumn leaves after a big gale.

When her husband came home with the news that he had sold our bills at 25 cents on the dollar, and would throw the other two in for fear the speculator, an actor friend, would be bitten too badly, she said radiantly, "Guess not," and led him to the table where the six faded, wishy washy governmental promises lay still damp. He rushed out and got the others from his consolers and submitted them to the same restorative process. The bank took the whole eight as the young couple's first deposit.—New York Times.

A Fellow Feeling.

University Extension Lecturer (to manager of Chicago bureau)—The second lecture of my course on Henry VIII has been objected to by eastern audiences as rather too eulogistic. Perhaps, therefore, I had better change it before delivering it here.

Chicago Manager—My dear sir, let it alone! It's just the thing we want. Why, the president of our circlet has been divorced five times himself!—New York Tribune.

LIKE OUR INDIANS.

The Matabeles of South Africa Have taken to Slaughtering Settlers.

Events are crowding one another with remarkable rapidity in Africa. The Transvaal, the Soudan, Abyssinia and now Matabeleland are the scenes of theatrical and tragic events and bid fair to make the present year most memorable and bloody in the history of the

A MATABELE WARRIOR.

Dark Continent. Taking advantage of the discomfiture and misfortune that befell the soldiers of the British South African Company in the recent discreditable raid under Dr. Jameson into the Transvaal, the Matabeles have revolted and like the Indians of our own plains in Western pioneer times have taken to the murdering of scattered European settlers and the plundering and burning of their properties.

The Matabeles, who are of a mixed race, have always been fierce fighters and, indeed, have lived in a constant state of warfare with neighboring tribes. Under King Lobengula and his predecessor they attained their greatest strength and reached a population of a quarter of a million. They used to make raids into Bechuanaland and Mashonaland, murdering the male members of these people, leading their wives and children into slavery and possessing themselves of the live stock and other property. It was to check these raids among the Mashonas that the last war was waged against King Lobengula.

LARGEST ON RECORD.

A Bird Which Stands Full Six Feet High and Weighs 100 Pounds.

A bird of prey as tall as a man! Such is the prize just captured by the superintendent of Richard Gird's ranch in the hills south of Chino, San Bernardino County, Cal. The prisoner is a magnificent specimen of the California vulture, without doubt the largest ever taken captive. From the crown of his ferocious-looking, red-wattled head to its strong, scaly talons, it measures six feet. Its plucky captor is an inch or two shorter in his cowhide boots. The man has the advantage in weight, for the bird weighs 100 pounds. Still, that is a fair fighting weight to carry through the rarefied air. In order to accomplish this feat the vulture is provided with wings that have a spread of twelve feet. Withal, the ornithologists who have seen it say that it is merely a youngster.

A SIX-FOOT VULTURE.

Allured by the palatable flavor of a dead cow, recently, the bird devoured nearly every particle of flesh from its bones, which so oppressed him that however vigorously he flapped his wings he was unable to soar away to his eyrie among the distant mountain fastnesses. In this humiliating predicament he was lassooed and dragged, fluttering ponderously but helplessly, to Mr. Gird's stable.

Raffle for a Preacher.

A Georgia paper tells of a raffle for a minister that was recently held in Parrott, Ga., the loser being compelled to take him. The Methodist congregation was having a revival which had dragged its length along until the congregation had become worn out with church-going and providing for the preachers, who came from all around to assist in the cause. The last preacher that came was the straw that broke the back of the dromedary. No one wanted him, and a meeting of the stewards was held to consider how he was to be provided for. One of them proposed to draw straws for him, which was not agreed to, but finally the question was settled by a proposition to raffle the minister off, and this actuany happened, the steward who made the lowest throw taking the unwelcome preacher and providing for his physical wants during the closing hours of the long religious services.

Oils.

A substitute for the oil of rose is being manufactured in Germany under the name of "reunoll." It belongs, it is stated, to the alcohol series, exists in the oil of geranium, and forms one of the principal constituents of oil of rose. It is economical in use, resists oxidation, and its odor resembles that of the tea rose.

It would be pleasant living in the world if there were not so many fools in it, but more difficult to make a living.

CRUDE INTOXICANTS.

THE MANUFACTURE OF STIMULANTS BY ABORIGINES.

Fermented and Distilled Liquors With Which the Uncivilized Natives of Different Parts of the World Produce "Drunk." Learning From the White Man.

It is a remarkable fact that up to the time of the coming of the whites the North American Indians generally had no knowledge of intoxicants. As for tobacco, they did not smoke it as we do apparently, but merely for ceremonial purposes. Going southward into Mexico in those days, however, the traveler might have found alcoholic stimulants in common use. Even at the present time the natives in that part of the world make an odd sort of beer out of corn. They wet a woolen blanket, lay it in the sun and spread whole grains of maize upon it. The grains germinate, sprouting and sending out rootlets through the texture of the blanket, which is kept moist. They are then parched and ground to a coarse meal. To this meal a little yeast, made by chewing some corn and allowing it to ferment, is added. Then the stuff is mixed with water and put away in jars. Fermentation follows, and as it diminishes the liquor becomes as clear as yellow amber, in which condition it is drunk. It is quite intoxicating.

Several varieties of grasses, herbs and flowers, the roots of sundry plants, the juices of the sugar cane and aloe, and even beets, are used by various tribes and peoples as a basis of drinks. In earlier times spruce trees, fir trees, birch trees and ash trees were tapped for their sap, which was fermented to make stimulating beverages. The willow, poplar, sycamore and walnut are said to yield palatable drinks. The Japanese obtain intoxicating beverages from plums and from the flowers of the motherwort and peach. The Chinese actually produce an alcoholic drink from mutton. The Abnaki Indians of New England used to manufacture a kind of liquor from the tops of fir trees, which they boiled and put into casks with molasses. The contents of the casks were allowed to ferment for three days.

The Eskimos were entirely unacquainted with the art of getting drunk until they came into contact with the whites. Travelers have observed that they drink extraordinary quantities of water when they can procure it. That is not always so easy in a latitude where the normal condition of water is that of a solid. In winter one of the most important occupations of the women is the thawing of snow to get water. The snow is cut into very thin slices as a preparation for the thawing process, and it is fetched to the hut from a considerable distance in order that it may be perfectly clean. The Eskimo greatly dislikes water that is many degrees above the freezing point.

The Chilcat Indians of southern Alaska distill a fearful beverage called "hootchenoo." The process adopted was probably suggested to them by United States soldiers originally. Molasses or vegetables of any sort, made into a "mash," are employed as raw material. The mash is put into a large tin can, which is connected with another tin can by a tube of the hollow stem of the giant kelp. This tube is buried in snow. A fire is built under the can that contains the mash, and the alcohol passes over into the other vessel. The liquor thus distilled is drunk fresh and produces temporary insanity.

The aborigines of Mexico and farther to the south were acquainted only with fermented intoxicants up to the time when they learned from the whites the principle of the still. At present, however, this contrivance of civilization is in general use among savages on this continent. The Apaches of southern Arizona make whisky from the sap of a small species of cactus. They cut out the hearts of the plants, resembling little cabbages, and in the cup shaped receptacles left behind the sap accumulates. From this sap they distill the famous "mescal," which drives those who drink it to sheer madness. Many spirituous drinks are made from the banana. Banana wine is obtained by pressing the fruit through a sieve, after which it is made into cakes, dried in the sun and dissolved in water when wanted for use.

On the west coast of Africa it is a common thing to see a bare legged woman climbing up a gigantic palm tree, with a calabash of immense size hung round her neck. When she has reached the top branch, she taps the tree, and the sap begins to flow. Then she hangs the calabash beneath the stream of sap and descends. Twelve hours later she climbs the tree again and takes down the calabash, which by that time is full of palm beer. It resembles mead somewhat, but a small quantity of it stupefies the drinker. African natives universally know how to prepare drunk producing liquors from such simple materials as the tops of broom corn, sugar cane juice and cocoanut milk.

All over eastern Asia is consumed a drink known as "arrack." The best of it is distilled from the unexpanded flowers of certain varieties of palm. A vile kind of arrack is made from impure molasses that is left over as refuse in the manufacture of raw sugar. It makes the drinker crazy, and under the influence of it whole parties of Malays sometimes "run amuck" together, the sport only concluding with the death of all participants, as well as the destruction of numbers of innocent people. This is a favorite Malay plan of committing suicide. A man makes up his mind that he wants to die, and so he fills himself up with arrack and starts to run amuck, stabbing every one that comes in his way until he himself is slain.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Blotting paper is wholly unsized, the lack of sizing enabling it to fake up and retain the ink of the writing on which it is laid.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.

FRIDAY, JULY 3 ..... 1896

A prize-fighter's opinion of himself has apparently a news value which supplies a long-felt want of this great commonwealth.

A Georgia man is going to run for any office he can get on the following platform: "I never was in the war; never hollered at the surrender and never killed anybody that let me alone, and the only thing I know about the financial question is that I need money.

A suit has been commenced at San Jose by Jacob A. Schessler, the father of the hired girl murdered by James A. Dunham the night he killed the family, for $25 000 damages. It seems that the girl had undertaken to earn money enough to pay off the mortgage on the man's home. This may look like a queer sort of suit, but why should not a judgment be had? If killed by an accident on a railroad a suit could be maintained and why not in this case?

People who have comfortable homes and hopes of eternal welfare to attend the Chicago convention will do so at their own risk, says the Washington Star: Out in Oakland, Cal., resides Aaron G. McAllister, who claims to be some sort of a prophet, and who has, as all such people have somewhat of a following. Mr. McAllister has delved deeply into Biblical mysteries and has mathematically satisfied himself and some of his friends that when July 7th next comes around there will be a grand ascension; that one-hundred and forty-four thousand of the faithful will be snatched from earth and borne painlessly and joyfully to their reward. Those who go to the Chicago convention will, of course, forfeit the privilege of accompanying Mr. McAllister.

New York City owns and runs the Brooklyn bridge at a profit, paying the following wages:

Engineers $4, firemen $2 87, conductors $2 75, toll collector $3; all eight hours.

The elevated railroad in the same city is a private corporation and pays the following wages; Engineers $3.50, 12 hours; firemen $1.60 to $2.50, 9 hours; conductors $2 to $2.60, 10 hours; gatemen $1.50 to $1.80, 10 hours; ticket men $1.60, 12 hours.

So with all the dead weight on one of the most corrupt city governments in the world, municipal ownership and conduct of public utilities pay better wages and give the public better service than private corporations. All the facts, such as the figures as to municipal light, street cars, water, etc., point to the same conclusion.—Labor Gazette.

The number of emigrants who arrived in this country in 1892 was 623,684. It gradually decreased until 1885 when it was only 279,948. In February of this year the increase began and since then the people have been pouring in at such a rate that Colonel Stumpf, commissioner of immigration at Washington, prophesies that the number this spring will equal, if it does not exceed the record of any previous year. A very large proportion of these immigrants are of the lowest class, mentally morally, and physically, and are without money or the ability to earn it. Some of them are refused admittance at the port of entry because they are certain to become objects of charity. It seems plain that European countries are not content with robbing us by an unjust financial system but are trying also to unload upon us all their incapables and dependents.

We have heard during the last eight or ten years from both political parties the advocacy of a policy entirely new among us, absolutely repugnant to all American diplomatic doctrines, and imported straight from the aristocratic and military nations of Europe. I refer to this recent doctrine called "jingoism"—a detestable word for a detestable thing. I should be at a loss to state which party in this country has been most guilty of this monstrous teaching; and if inquired of by some reader with a good memory, I should be obliged in honesty to confess that among the worst offenders in this respect are to be found several eminent graduates of Harvard University. What can be clearer than that this doctrine is an offensive foreign importation, against which, unfortunately, our protective legislation has proved an inadequate defense? The very term is of English origin, and is taken not from the best side of English politics, but from the worst—from the politics of Palmerston and Disraeli, and not of Bright, Gladstone, Hartington and Balfour. It is the most abject copy conceivable of a pernicious foreign idea; and yet some of our public men endeavor to pass it off among our people as American patriotism. A more complete delusion, a falser representation cannot be imagined. The whole history of the American people runs directly counter to this European notion. Our nation has always advocated the rights of neutrals, arbitration, and the peaceful settlement of international disputes. It has contributed more than any other nation to the promotion of peace and the avoidance of great armaments. What other powerful nation has dispensed with a standing army? What other nation with an immense seaboard has maintained but an insignificant fleet? It has been our glory to be safe, though without fortresses, fleets or armies.

Can anything be more offensive to the sober-minded, self-respecting laborious classes of American society, than this doctrine of jingoism, this chip-on-the-shoulder attitude, this language of the ruffian and the bully?—President Eliot in the July Forum.

Application for a Patent.

U. S. LAND OFFICE,
INDEPENDENCE, CAL.,
June 24, 1896.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, that David C. Lane, whose post-office address is Pomona, Los Angeles County, California, has this day filed his application for a patent for 1442.4 linear feet of the South West Mine, mine or vein, bearing gold, silver and lead with surface ground 497 feet in width on the West end and on the East end 592 feet in width, situated in Coso Mining District, County of Inyo and State of California and designated by the field-notes and official plat on file in this office as Lot Number 46 in Township 19 South, Range 40 East of Mount Diablo Meridian, said Lot No. 46 being as follows:—

Survey of South west Mine Lode Line.

GEO. S. WOOD, Postmaster.

A. A. Neill was down from Aberdeen last Tuesday.

County Clerk Hession left on Thursday morning for Big Pine and Bishop.

Miss Addie Lewis, of San Francisco, is home on a visit to relatives and friends.

Thos. Williams, of Round Valley, was a visitor at Independence on Saturday last.

Board of Supervisors will meet as a Board of Equalization on Monday next, July 6.

Mrs. A. W. Eibeshutz returned from an extended visit to San Francisco by Monday's train.

There is an uncalled for letter at the Thebe postoffice, Georges Creek, for Don. C. Brown, Esq.

To-morrow a picnic will be held in the grove on C. B. Rawson's place at Black Rock to celebrate the Fourth.

Quite a number of our townspeople will go to Bishop by to-morrow's to take in the celebration at that place.

Messrs. Ferguson, Thorpe, McMullin, Laprairie and Cook have come in from Mazourka canyon to spend the Fourth.

Mrs. J. J. Morton, who has been visiting with relatives and friends here, returned to her home at Keeler on Monday.

Mrs. C. M. Geiger and Miss Katie Arcularius, of Bishop, have been visiting friends in this vicinity during the past week.

Messrs. J. N. and E. Rose and Mat. McDonald came down from Fish Springs Thursday and will remain till after the Fourth.

Keeler will have quite a representation of Independence people at the celebration given by the enterprising citizens of the lake city.

George Naylor and Arthur Noble came in from Beveridge last Tuesday, where they had been engaged in packing ore for Pat Keyes.

R. S. Miner, Esq., after a business visit of several weeks in this vicinity, left for his home in Mono county last Saturday morning.

Owens River has fallen quite rapidly this week in spite of the hot weather. This means that the snow is rapidly disappearing, and water will be scarce in a short time.

Irving Woodin, son of Dr. Woodin, arrived by Monday's train from San Jose where he had been attending school. He will spend his vacation in hunting and fishing in the high Sierras.

John Schober, of Bishop, and June Smith of Big Pine, passed through Independence on Saturday last with their big teams on their way to Mojave for freight for our valley merchants.

John Baxter has sent us a sample of his honey crop. It is water-white, clear and crisp. This county carried off the palm at the Midwinter Fair, and there is no finer honey produced in this county than the product of Mr. Baxter's apiary.

The property on which the taxes had become delinquent was sold to the State Thursday morning at 10 o'clock. The amount of taxes due on realty together with the penalties and costs amounted to $1878.60, and on personal property $52.37. We are informed that the greater amount of taxes due is on mortgaged land and mining properties.

Stephen J. Field, justice of the supreme court of the United States, has been troubled for some time with an affection of the knee joint, which the doctors have been unable to define. He recently sat for three-quarters of an hour under the Roentgen ray, which showed that ossification has set in, a deposit of a bony nature which almost fills the space in the joint being plainly visible.

Will Not Celebrate.

Independence patriotism seems to slumber. All who wish to celebrate the glorious Fourth must don their best bib and tucker and hie themselves to neighboring hamlets (begging Swamper's pardon) to shoot the shining sky rocket, fizz the fire-cracker and bust the deadly bomb.

Patent Your Mining Claims.

Whether one wants to hold his claim or sell it, it is best, whenever practicable, to get a United States patent for it. Once that is secured, it is unnecessary to do any further annual assessment work on it. In case it is desired to sell it, the possession of a United States patent is second only, in the eyes of the purchaser, to the value of the claim itself. In any event it stops probability of litigation, and every miner knows that where not so protected the discovery of unusual value in a claim is nearly always the for vexations lawsuits.—Min. and Sci. Press.

Did It Ever Occur to You?

A story is going the rounds of the press of a young couple who attended a lecture recently. When the collection was taken up the young man began fishing in his pocket for a dime. His face expressed his embarrassment as he whispered hoarsely "I guess I have not a cent. I changed my pants before I came to the lecture." The modest young lady who had been examining the unknown region of a woman's dress for her purse, turned a pink color and said: "I'm in the same fix."

For Superior Judge.

In this issue will be found the announcement of Hon. N. D. Arnot that he will be a candidate for Superior Judge at the coming election. There is no office in the gift of the people upon which our general welfare more depends than that of Superior Judge. He is not only the arbiter of our differences, but is the guardian of the people's rights. We, therefore, in selecting a man for this important position, should be guarded by sober thought and reason. Mr. Arnot has presided over our Court at various times during the past twelve years, and has practically been Superior Judge for the last two years. We have all had an opportunity to know him as a Judge and as a man, and we have no hesitancy in saying that his candidacy will be one of the most popular in the history of the county.

From Aberdeen.

The name of Tibbetts Station has been changed for the more euphonious one of Aberdeen.

At a meeting of the citizens of Taboose School District last Saturday, it was decided to petition the Board of Supervisors to establish a public road, and build a bridge across the river at some point convenient to Aberdeen station.

Messrs. Neill and Rogers are freighting for Nathan Rhine.

Mr. Luke Smith has made another trip to Bodie and returned.

The Fourth will probably be a quiet day in Aberdeen. Most of the citizens like a quiet day in the country better than a noisy demonstration, so the Mayor and Council have made no preparation for a celebration, and we hope that the small boy and his fire-crackers will not be in evidence.

AURORA.

True to the Scent.

Crit Robinson, the wing shot, has the best trained hunting dog on the coast, a black pointer. At the pigeon shoots, where other dogs go crazy at the cracking of the guns and the dropping of the birds, Robinson's dog lies in the shade asleep. A whistle and the dog is on his feet pointing with every muscle tense and every nerve strained. At a signal the dog retrieves and in another minute is as sound asleep again as if nothing had happened. No matter where the dog is he will drop at a blast from Robinson's whistle and lie there unmovable for hours at a time.

Robinson tells a good story that illustrates the true scent of the dog. He came down out of the Mills building with an attorney one day, when the lawyer found he had forgotten his gloves and proposed to return for them.

"No, I'll send the dog," said Robinson.

"But how will he know my gloves?" asked the doubtful attorney.

"Just let him smell of your hand."

The dog was given the scent and dispatched up stairs. In a few minutes he returned with a ribbon the attorney's typewriter had been wearing around her waist.—Post.

Mojave Greatly Excited

A Mojave dispatch of June 23rd to the San Francisco Chronicle, says: "The greatest mining excitement in the history of Mojave was caused this morning by the arrival of Colonel Thomas Gaggers of Red Rock, with a nugget weighing over thirty-three ounces and valued at $593. Col. Gaggers is a prominent and experienced capitalist of Denver, and has been in the vicinity of the new El Dorado in and around Randsburg for some time. The Colonel a few days ago purchased a claim for $75, and yesterday, while making a partial examination of his property, ran across the nugget which was lying partly buried in the earth.

On his arrival this morning, the wildest excitement prevailed. The nugget was placed on exhibition in the drug store of W. C. Wilson, and caused staid men to lose their head. Business men closed their places, hitched up their teams and left for the mines, and by 11 o'clock not a horse or vehicle was to be had. At one time it was feared that the employes of the Southern Pacific and Santa Fe would catch the infection and abandon their posts."

The Hawthorne Bulletin commenting on the above says: This will amuse some of Jaggers' boon companions in this county. He may have found a $600 nugget, but the chances are that it is a chunk of "salted" iron. Tom used to say that mines were not made to work, but to sell, and he is probably following up his theory.

About two weeks ago John McKay, of Bishop, went to Bodie on a visit. Soon after reaching there he was taken down with pneumonia and after an illness of only a few days died. Johnny's many friends will learn with regret his sudden demise. Last Monday the remains of the deceased came down on the train to Laws, where they were met by many sorrowing relatives and friends, and taken to Bishop for interment. He was a native of Prince Edwards Island and aged about 50 years.

Speaking of the intelligence of animals, Independence has a horse that heads the list. A few days ago, while near the inclosure of his favorite horse, I. H. Mulholland was extolling the virtues and the wonderful curative properties of a certain remedy for man or beast, the horse standing near seemed to be taking in the whole conversation. Next morning the horse, who has a stable companion which is lame, was noticed with a bottle of his owner's favorite medicine in his mouth, passing it over the fence to his suffering companion. The truth of the above can be vouched for by credible witnesses.

C. O'Donovan Rossa, the Stockton real estate man, who was in Independence for several days, left last Saturday for Bodie. The Hawthorne Bulletin says Mr. Rossa is a staunch prohibitionist, and tips the beam at 385 pounds. Bob Stewart is trying to get up a foot race between Rossa and Deacon Gale to take place at Soda on the Fourth. Better give up the contract, Bob, as the name of the place itself would so discourage Rossa that he would not appear upon the scene of action.

Corbett and Sharkey have signed an agreement for a fight to a finish for the world's championship under Queensberry rules some place in the United States or Mexico within the next six months. Five ounce gloves will be used. In addition to the purse offered by the club, each pugilist is to put up $10,000, the whole $20,000 with the purse of the club to go to the winner. Corbett inserted a clause in the agreement against hugging, clinching or wrestling and requiring both to break away on order of the referee. Now, if they will only do away with the striking and punching it will become a pastime that not even a lady would enjoy.

To the People of Inyo County.

YIELDING TO THE IMPORTUNITIES OF my hosts of Inyo County friends expressed in petitions, letters and personally, I hereby offer myself as a candidate for the office of Judge of the Superior Court of Inyo County, at the approaching election in November.

The office being a non-partisan one, and as those who have so cordially invited me to seek the office represent all political parties, it would be pleasing to me to be the candidate of the people irrespective of party.

Respectfully,

N. D. ARNOT.

DISCOVERED BY MRS. OLNEY

How Her Correspondence Abroad Was Much Facilitated.

Mrs. Olney, wife of the secretary of state, recently put her Yankee wits to work and evolved an invention which has been a revelation to the postoffice department. That institution never understood the full value of the special delivery stamp until its powers were developed by down east wit. Mrs. Olney's discovery may prove of value to other people who find themselves face to face with the situation which roused that lady's shrewdness.

She had a daughter living abroad. Letters from her were always received just too late to be answered by return steamer of the same date. After puzzling over it some time Mrs. Olney, who was living in Boston at the time, queried the postoffice authorities as to whether a special delivery stamp, placed on a letter, mailed in a foreign country, would be delivered any quicker for it on this side. The answer finally came that unless the special delivery stamp was canceled before it landed here it ought to be delivered as any other letter similarly stamped. Accordingly one of the United States special delivery stamps was placed on the next letter mailed in Germany to Mrs. Olney. Under it in German was the direction, "This stamp is not to be canceled in Germany."

The scheme worked perfectly. The letter arrived ahead of the time of previous ones and an answer was sent back by steamer sailing the same day. Many letters have since been sent in the same manner and the special stamp always does its work as desired.—Chicago Chronicle.

A WONDERFUL INVENTION.

Machine Which Measures the Velocity of Cannon Balls.

Among the recent inventions in the art of photography is that of the polarizing photochronograph made by Professor Albert Crehore of Dartmouth college and Dr. George O. Squire, first lieutenant of the United States army, now stationed at Fortress Monroe.

The wonderful effects of the photochronograph will probably be demonstrated to the general public upon the completion of this instrument in the spring. John A. Brashear, an astronomical manufacturer of Pittsburg, has been given a contract for one of these wonderful machines. It is to be set up at Fortress Monroe, and will be used the coming summer in testing the velocity of the modern rifle projectile, as it swiftly speeds from the mouth of the great guns made by the United States ordnance department. Mr. Brashear says it is expected that the machine will be completed by the middle of April, as the government officials desire to have it about the 1st of May.

This instrument not only measures the velocity of the swiftest cannon ball in its flight, but measures it inside or outside of the gun and at any part of its course desired, to a degree of accuracy hitherto undreamed of.

Gift to American University.

The will of H. A. Massey, the Toronto agricultural implement manufacturer, was probated the other day. It contains 29 bequests to charitable and religious institutions throughout the Dominion. These bequests, with the sums given by Mr. Massey shortly previous to his death, amount to $1,100,000. Among the bequests is one of $50,000 to the American university, Washington, to erect a building to represent Canadian Methodism in that university.

Mr. Huntington is of the opinion that when a man goes west and grows up with the country it is the country's duty to bear a liberal share of the expense.

TAKE CARE OF YOUR WATCH.

The mechanism of the human body reminds one very much of the mechanical construction of a fine watch, the wheels, cogs and screws answering to the muscles, and the delicate springs are what may be likened to the nerves. One cannot move without the other, and yet the action of each is separate and distinct. So it is with the nerves and muscles of the human body. The ailments of the muscles are distinct from the ailments of the nerves, and, like the mechanism of a watch, if exposed to sudden change of heat or cold, they get out of order and for the time are useless. Especially is this so at this season of the year, when from exposure, negligence or want of care, the nerves are attacked and neuralgia in its worst form sets in. But like oil to the works of a watch so is St. Jacobs Oil to the nerves thus deranged. It is acknowledged by thousands to be the best and most permanent cure for this most dreaded disease; hence it is well to look after the human watch as well as the one in the pocket.

"How early do you clean house, Mrs. Perkins?" "Well, I always try to get started before the neighbors begin to borrow my stepladder."

THE SIGNIFICANCE OF A GRAY OVERCOAT

Upon the tongue, yellowness of the skin and eyeballs, nausea and uneasiness beneath the right ribs and shoulder blade, is that the victim of these discomforts is bilious. The "proper caper" under such circumstances is to take Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which also cures chills and fever, constipation, dyspepsia, rheumatic and kidney complaints and nervousness.

A STORY OF WEATHER

WHY THE MONTH OF MARCH IS OFTEN BLUSTERING AND STORMY.

Some Facts About Weather Changes—Cold Currents From the North and Warm Ones From the South—Effects of Magnetic Force.

March impresses itself upon the dweller in the northern half of the United States as a particularly windy and disagreeable month, with strong alternations of wintry and mild weather. This is due to the breaking up of the conditions that have prevailed since December and the processes of return to spring and summer. There is in the arctic zone an enormous amount of cold material to be disposed of, covering the northern regions in the form of ice and snow. At the same time the southern zone is becoming decidedly warmer in consequence of the advance of the sun to the northern side of the equator.

The United States is peculiarly the theater of this contest between the giants of cold and heat, and they stagger back and forth over this territory as one or the other is for the time being in the strongest form. The cold waves launch themselves from the north and carry their icy chill to the warm southern states; or, on the other hand, the warm currents of air from the south advance far into the north, and this alternation causes a rapid variation in the temperature and the other weather conditions at stations of the middle latitudes.

An examination of the storm tracks for March gives very definite evidence of the effect of this struggle for supremacy. Instead of being confined to the neighborhood of the mean tracks, it is found that they spread out over the entire territory of the United States from north so south. The phenomenon of looping southward along the Rocky mountain slope before recurving northeastward to the gulf of St. Lawrence is most pronounced.

The storms which first develop in Alberta or on the north Pacific coast may advance directly eastward over the lakes to the gulf, or they may be pushed south and recurve in Colorado, Missouri, southern Illinois or southern Indiana, in order to move to the St. Lawrence valley, or else they may be propelled still farther south along the Rocky mountain slope to Texas and the gulf coast, whence they proceed to the south Atlantic coast, and then turn northward to Newfoundland. Not a few of these storms dissipate in the lake region or the Ohio valley; others will persist in a path of nearly 5,000 miles, from Alberta to southern Texas, South Carolina and finally to Newfoundland. The unequal distribution of the tracks of the storms in March is therefore due to the irregular propulsion of cold masses of air from the arctic regions into the middle of the North American continent.

A peculiarity of continental action is that in summer the interior is warmer than the borders, but in winter the interior is colder than the coasts. The upper lake region and the upper Mississippi valley are especially remarkable for this feature. Between the 95 degree and 100 degree meridians, and between parallels 50 degrees to 55 degrees, the change in temperature is the greatest known in North America; it is coldest in winter there, and also it may become the hottest part of the country in summer; the range of temperature may be from 45 degrees below zero in winter to 105 degrees above zero in summer, a range of 150 degrees. The encroachments of spring upon the winter in North America proceed from the extreme southwest, the gulf of California and the Colorado river valley, and advance toward the northeast.

This leads to a description of one of the most characteristic features of the advance of the summer upon the North American continent. In winter the lines of equal normal temperature, that is, the isotherms, are grouped about the cold pole in quite a symmetrical manner, bending southward in the interior as they pass from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast. This configuration may be regarded as normal from November to March inclusive. In the summer the formation is somewhat inverted, the lines bending northward from the coasts toward the interior, though the crest is now farther west in the dry Rocky mountain region. The gulf of California is the central region of heat, and the crest extends from Yuma, A. T., northeastward toward the Dakotas.

The magnetic force seems to be efficient in producing meteorological effects in proportion as it can operate in cold atmospheric conditions. Hence the encroachment of warm air from the southern Rocky mountain districts, as spring comes on, is unfavorable for this kind of action, and it seeks to transfer its seat to the portions of the interior of the continent that still retain low temperatures, namely, to the Hudson bay districts. Finally, as the summer heat conquers this cold territory, the winter high passes away entirely, and the whole arctic region is covered by low pressures.

The unsettled weather of the month of March, especially in the northeastern portions of the United States, with its rapid alternations of warm and cold winds, often reaching considerable violence, is, therefore, the parting salute of the cold winter that has prevailed for five months throughout the northern cap. A most impressive feature of this change, as deduced from a close study of the barometers and temperature readings of the weather bureau, is the suddenness with which the struggle is concluded in the northwest, for March often comes in with a very violent action, and this is almost certain to end about the 20th of the month with moderate movements of the air. The struggle is prolonged in the east, but is usually about over by the 10th of April.—Written for Philadelphia Press by the United States Weather Bureau of Washington.

AGED MISSOURI POSTMASTER.

Elijah Watson, of Rushville, Has Held Office Forty-three Years.

In point of continual service, Elijah Watson, of Rushville, Buchanan County, Mo., is the oldest postmaster in the United States. He was appointed under the administration of Franklin Pierce, on June 10, 1853, and from that day to this he has been in uninterrupted charge. The office belongs to the fourth class, and even now, after forty-three years of careful nourishing by Mr. Watson, it is only worth $250 a year to the postmaster.

Rushville is a very old town for its size, and Watson was by no means its first postmaster. James Dickson, who had the largest store in town, was postmaster before him. The office only paid $10 a year then, and Dickson, finding it a sort of elephant on his hands, asked Elijah Watson, who was his clerk, if he would not like to take it. Watson did not mind, as he could act as postmaster and retain his position. Dickson made the recommendation to the department, and in a few weeks the commission came. During the forty-three years of Watson's service he has only been required to give four different bonds. The present administration required the largest, $5,000, but Elijah Watson could have given it had it called for several times that amount.

During the time he has been postmaster the office has only been robbed once. The robbery occurred about twenty years ago, and $25 in money and stamps were taken. The government reimbursed Watson to the extent of $10. In politics Elijah Watson was a Democrat when he was appointed postmaster of Rushville, and he is still Democrat. Watson was born in Flem ing County, Kentucky, in 1816. When John Wanamaker was Postmaster General he wrote to Watson for his photograph, telling him he was the oldest postmaster in point of service in this country. Watson's photograph was also displayed at the World's Fair. His wife, who accompanied him from Kentucky—they have been married nearly sixty years—is still living, and is remarkably well preserved. They have a family of sons and daughters scattered over the country.

HAS BUT TWO LEGS.

Remarkable Specimen of the Canine Family in Pennsylvania.

One of the most remarkable freaks ever seen is that of a two-legged dog, the property of Ed Lindsey, living near Bellefont, Pa. This wonderful specimen of the canine family has excited much curiosity. The freak is perfectly formed in every way, with the exception that where the front legs should be there are only small tufts of hair. The parents are both well developed and perfectly formed.

It looks not unlike the kangaroo when walking, but when lying down there is no distinguishing appearance from any other dog. Half rat-terrier and half whitlet, it is now almost full grown and weighs perhaps fifteen pounds. It is in excellent health and lively and frisky as a dog could well be. Its manner of locomotion is very much kangaroo-like, though at times, when frightened, it attempts to walk as the other dogs, and then its body is propelled along the ground by its abnormally long hind legs, and at such times the shoulder blades which seem well developed, are seen to work with great rapidity.

BIPED DOG.

BROWN'S GREAT CURES.

The Michigan Healer Much Sought by the Sick and Suffering.

The wonderful cures effected by the Owosso healer, Edward T. Brown, seem no less miraculous than the work of the famous Schlatter. Brown was formerly employed as foreman of one of the departments by the Owosso Manufacturing company, but was obliged to give up his position because of the number of applications he received daily from the afflicted.

He is an unassuming young man not yet 30 years of age, and by his mysterious power has already cured numerous cases of neuralgia, rheumatism and sick headache, together with two cases of insanity, one of which had been a case of two years' standing.

Brown attributes all his success to faith, and, like other faith healers, effects all his cures by taking the patients by the hand and assuring them that they will be afflicted no longer. His list of cures is rapidly increasing, and those who have consulted him thus far, mostly people of this city, are loud in their praise of his power to relieve the sick.—Chicago Times-Herald.

The Piety of Washington.

The doubt has never been raised in any respectable quarter that Washington was not a man of strong religious faith. One would need to read hardly more than his farewell message to be convinced of that. In that document, it will be remembered, Washington distinctly says that religion and morality are indissoluble and that the two together constitute the main props of civil government. But a writer now comes forward in The Lutheran Quarterly to claim and to prove not only that the greatest of Americans was a religious man, but that his pre-eminence as a general, statesman and leader was due not to genius, which has never been claimed; not to learning, of which he had no large store; not to eloquence, of which he had less, but to moral excellence and especially to piety.

"Washington was a Christian," says this writer. "Study his private life among the shades of Mount Vernon. Contemplate his career as a soldier at the head of the army. Scrutinize the acts of his administration as chief magistrate of the republic, and you will constantly find proofs that he was governed by Christian principle. If we exclude the molding power of Christianity in the formation of Washington's character, we can neither account for it nor interpret it. Depraved human nature cannot bring forth, under the most favorable circumstances, such a man, such a hero, such a ruler, such a patriot and such a statesman. Heathenism in the highest stages of civilization attained in all ages and lands has produced no character approximating to that of Washington."

The Circulating Barber.

Now it is the traveling barber. He is located on the upper west side and differs from the ordinary every day barber in that he calls at the homes of fairly well to do business men at fixed hours of the day, and for an extra compensation shows his ability as a tonsorial artist. The class of customers that this visiting barber has is the envy of all the shop barbers for miles around his territory. How he does it is best explained in his own language. Here's what he told me: "The business of a visiting barber resembles that of a fortune teller in that it must be personal. My charges per week to each customer range from $2 up. I number among my customers bankers, brokers, lawyers and young men of leisure. In all I shave and otherwise attend to 25 customers each day, three of them before dinner in the evening. I do not know if there are any other visiting barbers in the city, nor do I care. All that I know is that I make money enough out of it to keep a horse and rig to take my wife driving on Sunday. While I was a slave of the shop I never did that. The man who patronizes the visiting barber is sensible. It may be a little more expensive, but it is cleaner, more convenient and satisfactory all around."—New York Letter.

ALL CHICAGO KNOWS HIM.

W. W. Watson, Leading Real Estate Man, Restored to Health by Paine's Celery Compound.

CHICAGO, March .—Mr. W. W. Watson's reputation throughout the West for unerring judgment in the valuation of land has made him foremost among the most conservative, careful class of investors in Chicago.

Unlike many hard driven business men, the owner of "Alpine Heights," that splendid suburb of Chicago, has not neglected his health on account of his exacting business. The following unrequested statement from Mr. Watson shows how consistent with his life-long, careful, conscientious and successful business habits has been his attention to getting well. He states in the Times-Herald:

"Upon the recommendation of a friend, I used Paine's celery compound for headaches, constipation, indigestion and less of sleep, and found it all it was recommended to be. I suffer no more from headaches, sleep soundly at night, and am now in perfect health. This is the only medicine that I have ever taken for these complaints, which has benefited me at all."

W. W. WATSON,
225 Dearborn Street.

Busy men and women are apt to think there is always time to get well.

The fact that only one person in a hundred dies of old age shows how recklessly men and women postpone attending to their health and allow it to go to pieces while they devote themselves heart and soul to affairs that are trifling in comparison. Wives and mothers have no greater duty than to see that those dear to them do not become so absorbed in the work of providing for the household as to lose their health and shorten their days.

No more thoughtful step could be taken during the spring days that are now here than to urge such tired and often irritable home providers to take Paine's celery compound. There are thousands of homes where overwork has led to worrying, fretting and despondency, that need only Paine's celery compound to banish the unhealthy atmosphere and make things bright and cheerful again.

It is the only spring remedy universally prescribed by physicians. It makes people well by giving them a hearty appetite and a relish for their food. Hard worked men and women, the nervous, weak and debilitated, get new strength, fresh nervous energy and a purer, more vigorous blood supply from Paine's celery compound.

This most valuable nerve and brain invigorator and restorer practically demonstrates the life long conviction of its eminent discoverer, Professor Phelps, M.D., LL. D., of Dartmouth College. Professor Phelps was for a long time convinced that sound nutrition was the keystone of firm health, and that where there were signs of poorly nourished nerve tissues, and of thin, pale-colored blood, some means must be devised to supply these deficiencies briskly and rapidly. Professor Phelps prepared Paine's celery compound on this basis. It has proved an invigorator, strengthener and a great spring purifier, such as the world has never enjoyed before our day.

Tomorrow, or next day, or the day after is not soon enough to look about getting rid of weakness or disease. Take Paine's celery compound today. There is no time equal to these early spring days for throwing off poor health. There are few persons who do not need to take a spring remedy.

Many not downright sick, but tired or ailing, would be immensely benefited by taking Paine's celery compound, especially at this particularly favorable season of the year.

This great compound will banish that tired feeling, cleanse the blood and regulate the nerves.

MOONRISE SERENADE.

Moonrise and a mellow sheen
All the slumbrous hills are steeping.
Wake, my sweet one, nor be sleeping
Through sweet Cynthia's softest phase—
Wake and rise and swiftly glide
To thy lattice, sweet, for, oh,
One who wooes thee for his bride
Sigheth here below!
I love you! I love you!
My heart, I must confess,
Can no more love you more
Than it can love you less.

Moonrise! Through the cerement blind,
Lo, the golden lovelight streaming—
Lady, lady, past my dreaming,
Thou art kind, most kind!
He who heard thy garment glide
Swiftly o'er the happy floor,
He who wooed thee for his bride
Sigheth now no more.
I love thee! I love thee!
My heart—oh, happiness!—
Can never love thee more,
Need never love thee less.

SHE RODE FOR FUN.

"Jim," said I, breaking in upon his ditty, "what was the yarn you were going to tell about the time you engineered that English hunting party through the Bear Paw mountains?"

We were riding along the trail which stretches its serpentine length at the feet of the eternally grand old Rockies between Forts McLeod and Calgary on a bright, warm afternoon in January. When they have a "chinook" out there, sporting in its rude, boisterous, yet withal genial fashion, through the deep defiles of the mountains from over the Pacific, with a rumble like Niagara at a distance and a force which makes you button your coat up tightly to keep it from blowing off, the snow soon vanishes even in midwinter, and the thermometer jumps from "40 below" to "temperate" so suddenly that you wonder if the sun has not wheeled himself several degrees out of his normal course at such a season or the breath of an approaching prairie fire is not fanning your cheek.

The singer gave the wad of tobacco in his jaw a twist with his tongue and aimed an amber jet at a "bulldog" on his horse's ear before turning upon me a pair of glistening eyes, with black points set in [illegible] of milk, a short, stop till she ketched the wagon. So I jest natterly 'lowed I'd give her a song an dance, hevin a pretty smart day ahead o' me an wantin to git into camp early. Consekently I told the nigger—who rode with me—not to look back.

"When we sta'ted, of co'se the fust ten mile or so was up hill mostly, an I couldn't travel extra fast, so it was 'bout 2 when we hit the summit, an everything hed went lovely. Then we hed a little 'hand out,' an the descent begun.

"I didn't lose no time. The mules stepped out gay' me a-poppin the buckskin among 'em oucet an awhile jest to keep 'em chee'ful an in good humor, an the hill—well, chain lightnin could go down—with britchin. I hedn't went a great ways when I heerd a fur off call—like a coyote got astray. Pretty soon the nigger he couldn't set peaceful an onconcerned no longer an stealed a look behin. Then he leaned forrard, 'th his han's 'tween his knees, an chuckled to hisself. I paid no manner of notice. Now he screws round again in his seat, chuckles, an twists a little harder, squints at me sideways again, an says:

"'She's a-wavin, Jim.'

"'Set still, you blamed black breasted sandpiper,' says I. 'Let 'er wave.'

"He was tol'abul quiet fer a sho't space, while you might cut a pipe of terbacker, mebbe. The calls sounded pretty faint now. Far back up the rocky trail I could ketch the clear, sharp ring of her hoss' hoofs—pit-e-pat! pit-e-pat! pit-e-pat!—remindin me somethin of one of them gals from the east down in Benton chassayin up an down the room in a newfangled wardance they call the 'Rushin Polkay.'

"Jumbo's head swung around again on its pivot. He squirmed an twisted an chuckled some more. The fun was too fast fer his ornery, woolly scalp, an he bu'st out:

"'Dah! she waves, Jim. Now—now! she waves. Dah—dah! she's a-wavin. Now—now! she's a-wavin, Jim. Now! she waves. Jim—Jim—Jim!—she waves. Jim—she waves!—she waves!—she waves!'

JACK CHINN'S KNIFE.

A PROMINENT FIGURE IN THE KENTUCKY SENATORIAL FIGHT.

Always Carries His Bowie Knife In His Front Pocket—His Telegram Denouncing Governor Bradley—Stories of Encounters In His Exciting Career.

Out of the recent turmoil at Frankfort, Ky., there came to the watching world this telegram:

FRANKFORT, Ky., March 17.—To my mind there is nothing in the situation here to cause any man to fear to discharge any duty he owes himself, his family or his state. There will be no election of a United States senator at this session of the general assembly, which dissolves tomorrow. The public press has held me up as a scarecrow before the Republicans without just cause. I came here and have remained here of my own motion because of my admiration and friendship for the Hon. J. C. S. Blackburn, and have used my feeble influence, first to re-elect him, and, when all hope of that was gone, to prevent the election of any Republican. My private opinion of the action of William O. Bradley in ordering the militia of the state here is that he was not actuated by any pure motive, but the idea was born of a coward soul. I regret that a governor of Kentucky, my native state, has given to the world the supremest evidence of cowardice ever yet exhibited by any Kentuckian of high or low degree.

J. P. (JACK) CHINN.

That is intensely characteristic of the man who wrote it. Over a signature Jack Chinn says a man is a coward. Jack has a habit of saying things loudly. One may not mistake his words when he says anything. He puts it plainly and in strident tones, and, however hard and unwelcome it may sound to the man on the other side of the proposition, Colonel Jack Chinn, Kentuckian, is always prepared to make it good. Making good is another habit of his, evidenced by personal encounters in every big town from New York to San Francisco, from Lexington to Chicago.

Out of the native picturesqueness of Kentucky nothing more dramatic has come than this dark haired, dark eyed, rotund colonel, who says things and follows his words with a blow. A life of storm has been that of Jack Chinn. A big, corn fed lad, he swung into the saddle and followed Morgan through that series of night rides which made the Confederate leader famous. The lightning dash in the dark, the swift thrust, the yell, the flash and roar of a carbine, et, and clasped in it was the bowie, which flashed and went up to the hilt in the sod as Jack's eyes closed in unconsciousness. The policeman committed suicide by jumping into a well when [illegible] doctors said Chinn would recover.

There are scars and scars all over the United States which can be attributed to Chinn's bowie and the front pocket movement, but no man ever said he got his wounds save from the front, and the man who is declaring in print that the governor of Kentucky is a coward is the man who will attempt to prove it when called on. Should there be a conflict at Frankfort, somewhere in the tale of it will flash the Chinn knife.—New York Journal.

Poke Bonnets and Brown Suits For the Women—Army Blues For Men.

God's American Volunteers will march out on their crusade of evangelizing America in very smart uniforms. The uniform of the women will be seal brown cashmere. The skirt will be perfectly plain, of such a length that it will just clear the ground. The length is important, for it would not only be difficult, but it would be most unsoldierly, for a corps of female Volunteers to march each with a tambourine in one hand and her dress skirt in the other. The waist of the uniform will be a tight fitting norfolk jacket, with three box plaits down the front and three down the back.

The headgear for the women will be a bonnet, not a hat. Mrs. Booth has clung tenaciously to the bonnet all along, but many of the women Volunteers have made objections, strong ones. Mrs. Booth has brought all the opponents of the bonnet around to her way of thinking. The three shapes from which the selection will be made are called the "Pilgrim," the "Evangeline" and the "coal scuttle." They are all coal scuttleish. As compared with the Salvation Army bonnets, they are shorter behind, and they do not cover the ears. The poke is also narrower. The style for spring and summer will be brown straw, trimmed with brown satin ribbon.

The men's uniform will be almost exactly like that of the United States army. The trousers will be light blue and the blouse dark blue. The blouses of the officers will have standing collars. The collars of the privates' blouses will be like the collars of ordinary coats. Upon the collars will be embroidered [illegible] letters "G. A. V." The hat has not [illegible] on.—New York Sun.

ROENTGEN IS A BARON

THE BAVARIAN SAVANT HONORED BY PRINCE REGENT LUDWIG.

Recognized After Years of Toil—Decorated Also by Kaiser Wilhelm—Something of His Life—His Townsmen and Friends Surprised.

In recognition of valuable services to his native country and to all the world, Prince Ludwig of Bavaria has created Professor Roentgen of Wurzburg a baron.

A little more than a month ago the name of Professor Roentgen was only known in a few exclusive scientific circles, mainly for some speculative papers on chemical subjects. Today it is popular throughout the civilized world.

And yet the world will never know much of the years of endless toil and patient research which preceded the phenomenal discovery which has brought fame and no doubt fortune to this Bavarian savant. The news that the professor had found a way of photographing the invisible struck the old world like a lightning flash, and America was also startled, notwithstanding her rapid strides in mechanical inventions and scientific discoveries.

Of the private life of the inventor of the X ray little is known, as the professor lives a secluded life, being present only at important social gatherings of his students. He might be called a bookworm, and his townsmen and most intimate friends are most surprised at his sudden elevation and the distinctions shown him by royalty and scholars.

I learn from these that Baron Roentgen has always been a tireless experimenter, and finally (his enemies say by [illegible] chance) he learned one of the un- [illegible] lers of nature. He is ad- [illegible] countries, but

THREE EYES AND A BONE ARMOR

A Strange Monster Which Existed in Colorado Long Ago.

Prof. O. C. Marsh has contributed to the National Museum at Washington the skull of a gigantic reptile that was dug up by him not long ago in Southern Colorado. Triceratops is the name given to the creature by its discoverer, who says that it was about twenty-five feet long, standing as high as a very big elephant. It was clad in an armor of massive plates of bone and from its forehead sprang two sharp, curved horns, each a yard in length. A third horn adorned the nose, which was further armed with a powerful cutting beak. The most remarkable point about the skull is a hole in its top, through which a huge eye looked out. The animal, in fact, had three eyes.

The size of the skull shows that the head of the beast was enormous, even for such a great body. In order to hold it up without getting tired the owner was provided with a special structure in the shape of a frill of solid bone, six feet in width, extending backward from the head. To this the tremendous muscles were attached. Truly, it must have been a formidable monster, though not dangerous unless attacked, inasmuch as it was sluggish and stupid. The brain was very small in proportion to the bulk of the animal. As for the third eye, no one can say what the special purpose of it was. There is a common green lizard in Maryland, three inches long, that has a similar eye in the top of its head; but it is blind. However, a corresponding organ is found in some turtles and in certain other reptiles, buried in the middle of the head, yet exhibiting all the most important elements of structure that go to make up an eye.

A MIDNIGHT DREAM.

BROTHER AND SISTER REUNITED IN A STRANGE MANNER.

Meet After Half a Century—Stillwagner Prayed For Divine Help—His Sister's Residence Revealed to Him In a Vision. Story Is Vouched For.

Jacob Stillwagner, an aged resident of Boydtown, a small village three miles east of Shamokin, Pa., has just returned from Stetsonville, Wis., and tells a remarkable story of how he and one of his long lost sisters were reunited through the medium of his prayers and dreams. He claims that he was born in Iowa 65 years ago, where he lived, together with his parents, a sister and two brothers, until he arrived at the age of 7 years, when both of his parents died suddenly, leaving the four small children without any means of support.

Kind neighbors provided for the little ones until permanent homes could be found for them, but within a year of their great bereavement they were scattered far apart and soon lost all trace of each other. Mr. Stillwagner says that his adopted parents drifted eastward, and just as he arrived at the age of manhood he located at Boydtown, where he has since resided.

He made frequent attempts to find some trace of his brothers and sister as the years passed by, but it was not until early last fall that he met with any success in this direction. Then while walking across the mountain from Boydtown to Shamokin he was seized with an overwhelming desire to find his long lost relatives, and kneeling on the fallen autumn leaves earnestly prayed God to direct his steps toward his brothers or sister, and allow them to be reunited before being called to their eternal home.

The desire to find his loved ones became the sole object of Stillwagner's remaining days, and about three weeks after his prayer in the forest he dreamed that he was at Stetsonville, Wis., where he found his sister, from whom he had heard no tidings for more than half a century. He distinctly saw the interior of her home and had her features and the external surroundings of her house indelibly stamped upon his brain.

When he related this dream to his friends, they laughed and tried to convince the old gentleman that it was merely the result of his continual thinking and talking on the subject that was absorbing all of his time and attention. He could not be discouraged, however, and resolved to investigate on the lines laid out in his dream.

The name of his sister, the most important clew, had not been revealed to him in his midnight vision, but he communicated with the postmaster of the little Wisconsin village, describing the house and inmates he had seen, and closed by asking whether such a habitation and family really existed there. Several weeks passed before he received a reply, but the anxiously looked for letter gave the history of the woman occupying the home he described, and convinced Stillwagner that it really was his [illegible]ster.

[illegible]o confident was he on this point that

OUT-DOOR SPORTS.

The hardy, strong, athletic man, after months of out-door life and sports, feels all the better, although he may have suffered, as many do, from serious sprains and bruises. If sports were stopped on that account we would have no more of the great base ball games, sports of field and turf, of oar and gun, of rod and racquet, but all sportsmen and athletes take sprains and bruises as an accompaniament with composure, because they know how easy and certain it is to use St. Jacobs Oil and get rid of permanently the worst forms of any such accidents. There may be some, indeed many, not quite up to date in being prepared for the season's enjoyment, and such should undoubtedly have a supply of this great remedy for pain.

Customer—I want a book on "Time and Eternity." New Clerk (unacquainted with titles)—Sorry, madam, but our terms are strictly cash.

Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness, without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, then laxatives or other remedies are not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, then one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction.

SILVER MAY SPLIT PARTIES.

Ex-Governor Campbell Believes the House Will Have to Elect the Next President.

"I want international free coinage of silver at a ratio of 15½ to 1," said ex-Governor James E. Campbell of Ohio. "I consider single gold standard advocates as much wrong on one side as I believe single silver standard men on the other. I am opposed to our country going ahead alone and coining silver free. No one nation can do it and survive, but the United States, Germany and France could do so without England's co-operation. With an international agreement all troubles with the money question would vanish, and I expect to live to see such an arrangement effected."

The ex-governor was talking with several local politicians when he made this statement. The conversation then switched and Mr. Campbell said:

"Any good man who wants it can have the Democratic nomination for president this year."

"Do you want it?" was asked.

"I am not a candidate," was the reply.

"Would you accept it?"

"The possibility of having a chance to do so seems so remote that I don't think it worth considering, but just now I should refuse. Whitney and Matthews would make a splendid team if they would accept. New York and Indiana is a good old Democratic combination, and I don't know how we would feel if the two states were not both represented on the ticket.

"But I believe," he continued, "that the next president will be elected by the house of representatives. There will be a fight in both the national conventions between the extreme gold men and the extreme silver men. Both are cranks. The two parties as Democrats and Republicans have really no difference on the money question. The silver men will not be satisfied with the Republican platform, and they will bolt and lose the party enough states to throw the election of the president into the house."

"What sort of money planks will the national platform contain?"

"That I cannot say, but this is the day of straddles. The Republican party claims to favor a gold standard, yet none of the leaders will come out and declare for it in so many words. If McKinley has done it, I have not heard of it. Therefore a compromise plank with the Republicans will be a straddle."

"What about the Republican nomination for president?"

"Well, th... don't seem to have arrived at any understanding yet."

"How about McKinley?"

"Oh, nothing, only he'll find a great deal of green goods in his grip when he unpacks it in St. Louis."

A Frank Statement.

Mrs. R. C. Peterson, of Fairhaven, Tells a Reporter of Her Recent Illness and Cure.

From the World-Herald, Fairhaven, Wash.

Mrs. R. C. Peterson, of Fairhaven, Wash., who has been for a number of years a sufferer from nervous prostration, rheumatism and female weaknesses, and who has lately entirely recovered therefrom, was called upon a few days ago by a Herald representative whose attention had been called to her case. In answer to an inquiry, Mrs. Peterson said:

"Yes, I was a sufferer for many years from nervous attacks, rheumatism and other complaints. We, my husband and I, expended a large sum of money in visiting the celebrated doctors of Denver, Salt Lake City and San Francisco, but my relief in all cases was only temporary, and we had nearly despaired of my ever recovering my health, when, one day a friend advised Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, saying they had known of a case very similar to mine, where a wonderful cure had been effected by their use.

"Acting upon this advice, as a last remedy, my husband purchased a box of the Pink Pills more to please my friend than from any belief in the medicine. However, before the box was half gone I felt a decided change for the better and after using three boxes was entirely recovered, and felt as well and strong as I ever did.

"Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have certainly been a wonderfully effective remedy for me, and I have no hesitancy in recommending them to any one who was affected as I was."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are not looked upon as a patent medicine, but rather as a prescription. An analysis of their properties shows that they contain, in condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are an unfailing specific for such diseases as locomotor ataxia, partial paralysis, St. Vitus' dance, sciatica, neuralgia, rheumatism, nervous headache, the after effects of la grippe, palpitation of the heart, pale and sallow complexions, and the tired feeling resulting from nervous prostration, all diseases resulting from vitiated humors in the blood, such as scrofula, chronic erysipelas, etc. They are also a specific for troubles peculiar to females, such as suppressions, irregularities, and all forms of weakness. They build up the blood and restore the glow of health to pale and sallow cheeks. They are for sale by all druggists, or may be had by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y., for 50c. per box, or six boxes for $2.50.

HUNTING PERUVIAN GAME.

An Englishman's Account of His Fine Sport In the Highlands.

Hunting in the highlands of Peru is a very enjoyable if little known sport, according to an Englishman "who spent some days hunting from 15,000 to 18,000 feet above the sea on grassy plains or in valleys surrounded by high mountains." There is considerable small game—snipe, ducks, culi culi (a kind of grouse) and quivio (a kind of guinea fowl)—but the game a sportsman out for a day or two seeks is vicuna and alpaca. The vicuna is the wild llama and is a shy animal with great vitality, requiring neck or shoulder shots to kill. The alpaca is the mountain vicuna, living on the coarse and scanty forage of its home region. Its wool is a foot long, but so curly and fine that it fits to its body like a darky's hair. Both are related closely to the guanaco of the Patagonia deserts, which sometimes wanders into the uplands of Peru.

The Englishman carried a 44-40 American rifle and a 16 gauge shotgun for small game.

"Entering a large pampa," he writes, "we sighted a herd of vicuna. We tried to ride around them, but they made off, passing Ashmore at about 200 yards. Lying down, he opened fire, and a fine specimen rolled over. We cleaned it, loaded it on to a pack mule and rode on, soon striking another herd of seven, which at once made off, but my second shot at 140 yards dropped one dead. This we took, and soon after bagged two brace of culi-culi."

That night the hunters rolled up in their blankets on the mud floor of a hut. Hammocks strung from post to post would have been better. Next day, after a restful night, they "began to shoot the valley adjacent to Caraguiri." Some of the writer's bullets hit two vicuna at 130 yards, and some of the others hit the valley. The dead animals were loaded on the pack mules, and after going over the summit of an 18,000 foot mountain the hunters had the rare good fortune for that region of jumping seven guanaco, which ran too fast for the mules the men rode and struck a gait across the pampa discouraging to the hunters.

"But leaping from my mule," says the writer, "and sighting my rifle at 400 yards, I dropped a bullet ahead of them, and the bunch of dust scared them to a standstill. I then plumped the remaining nine bullets into the herd, and two fell dead."

A 38-55 rifle would have been better for such long range work, and a 40-82 still better, but no matter, the guanacos were killed. One was 45 inches high at the shoulder and weighed 140 pounds dressed. The other was 36 inches high and weighed 75 pounds dressed.

The total bag was two guanacos, seven vicuna, seven brace of culi-culi, one brace of quivio, five ducks, three snipes and no end of fun. The end of the hunt was to the tunes of a banjo and a piano. —New York Sun.

A congressman is a public servant in the full sense of the word.

He is responsible to his constituents, to his party, to himself—the honorable office is full of hard, thankless work, and heavy responsibility.

Congressman William W. Grout is grateful to the friend who directed him to Paine's celery compound, when prolonged official work had well nigh exhausted his health and strength. His letter reads:

Committee on Expenditures the War Dept.
House of Representatives, U. S.,
Washington, D.C., Feb. 28, 1896.

I found relief in Paine's celery compound for insomnia. Its action on the circulation and digestion was also beneficial.

Very truly yours, WILLIAM W. GROUT.

There is something wrong when one feels "tired all the time." It is contrary to every condition of good health.

There ought to be no necessity of drumming into the ears of tired men and women who feel they are broken in health, a... every day losing in weight and ... the urgent need of taki... compound ...

good digestion. A healthy blood supply is regulated by the nerves, and when these vital tissues become fatigued and badly nourished, the bad effect is seen in failing digestion, distressing, ringing sounds in the ears, dizzy spells, depression, neuralgia and lassitude. Spring days afford every one the opportunity for shaking off old weaknesses and persistent disorders.

Physicians of every school have been from the start urged to inquire into the formula of Paine's celery compound, that they might satisfy themselves of its wonderful power of making the sick well. Prof. Edward E. Phelps, M.D., LL.D., as soon as he presented Paine's celery compound to his fellow physicians, was always anxious to have the invigorator tried in cases that had resisted the usual methods of treatment, that he might prove the truth of every claim made for his newly discovered formula for Paine's celery compound. The great remedy always gave relief, and in 90 cases out of 100 made people well.

YET LOVE CAN LAST.

Yet love can last, yet love can last,
The future be as was the past,
And faith and fondness never know
The chill of dwindling afterglow,
If to familiar hearth there cling
The virgin freshness of the spring
And April's music still be heard
In wooing voice and winning word.

If when autumnal shadows streak
The furrowed brow, the wrinkled cheek,
Devotion, deepening to the close,
Like fruit that ripens tenderer grows;
If, though the leaves of youth and hope,
Lie thick on life's declining slope,
The fond heart, faithful to the last,
Lingers in love drifts to the past;
If, with the gravely shortening days,
Faith trims the lamp, faith feeds the blaze,
And reverence, robed in wintry white,
Sheds fragrance like a summer night—
Then love can last!

—Alfred Austin.

CAUSE AND EFFECT.

"Gossip—it's a confounded nuisance! That's what I call it! Why can't they let us alone? I am accustomed to any amount of gossip. People must have something to talk about, and I'm sure I'm delighted to be able to afford them any amusement, but when it comes to being smacked on the back and congratulated six times in one afternoon it's coming it a bit too strong. I don't mind for my own sake—a man can look after himself—but I'm thinking of you. I was in hopes that you had not heard."

"Not heard indeed! I had two letters this morning and three this afternoon, four wanting to know when the wedding was to be and the fifth from a girl asking to be bridesmaid. I am afraid to go out. People fly at me at every corner, shake my hands off and say how delighted they are, and how charming it is, and how they always knew it would come to this, and that we are made for one another—they never did know two people so exactly suited."

"Extraordinary! That's what they say to me. I never was so taken aback in my life. Of course we've always been good friends, but"—

"Certainly not."

"And I don't think"—

"Neither do I. It's absurd! Utter nonsense!"

"No, but really—let us have it out while we are about it. What can have given rise to such a ridiculous report? We have been a good deal together, of course, because we are in the same set and always seem to hit it off, and you are such a jolly good dancer and all that kind of thing—but I can't see what we have done to set people talking at this rate. Honestly, now—I am anxious to know—did you ever imagine—that is to say, did you think—I mean, have I ever"—

"You never have. No, Captain May, and I have never imagined! On the contrary, I don't mind admitting, now that we are upon the subject, that I have cherished a secret grudge against you because you have never given me an opportunity of refusing you. That sort of neglect rankles in a woman's mind, and now you see for yourself the awkward position in which it has placed me. When people ask if I am engaged to you, I am obliged to confess that I have never been asked. You ought to have thought of this and provided against it. It would have been so easy some night at a ball or in an interval at the theater—the whole thing might have been over in five minutes, and then I should have been able to say that I had refused you, and everything would have been happy and comfortable. I don't feel as if I could ever forgive you!"

"Sorry, indeed! You see I should have been most happy, only I could never feel quite sure that you really would re"—

"How odious you are! You need not have been afraid. There never was anything more certain since the beginning of the world. I wouldn't marry you to save my life. I would as soon think of falling in love with the man in the moon. We have always been friends, of course, but that counts for nothing. One may like a person very much and yet find it quite impossible to go any further. I could better love a worse man."

"Same with me. I think no end of you, but when Lewis came up and congratulated me the other day I was struck all of a heap. If he had said the same thing about a dozen other girls, I should have been less surprised, but it never occurred to me to look upon you in that light."

"Oh, indeed! I'm awfully obliged, I'm sure, but I don't think much of your taste. There are a dozen other men who wouldn't agree with you, that's one comfort. As I am so utterly repulsive in your eyes, I think I had better say 'Good afternoon' at once and relieve you of my presence."

"What nonsense you talk! I never said a word about your appearance that I know of. That's the worst of arguing with a woman—she flies off at a tangent, and there's no doing any good with her. I don't see why you should be offended. You seemed to think it just as impossible to fall in love with me."

"That's different—I mean I don't care what you think, but other people think—that's to say, I have always been told— Some people think I am very nice, if you don't. I think it's perfectly hateful of you to say such things. I should like to know, just as a matter of curiosity, what it is in me you object to so much?"

"You won't like it, you know, when you do hear. You'll be in a bigger rage than ever. Much better leave it alone. Well, if you will have it, I dislike the way you do your hair. Wait a moment; it means more than you think. It is not only ugly in itself, but it shows a fatal want of perception. Your beauty—if you will allow me to say so—is of a classic order, and if you adopted a more natural style of coiffure your appearance would really be—er—uncommonly fetching! 'Stead of that, you persist in following a hideous exaggeration [illegible] any st[illegible]der [illegible] but it has farreaching consequences. The moment we meet I notice it, don't you know, and feel annoyed. The whole time I am with you I am worrying about it. It sets up a chronic state of exasperation. Perhaps you don't understand the feeling"—

"Oh, yes, I do! Perfectly! I feel the same toward you because you will insist on wearing enormous stand up collars. I call that a want of perception, if you like. I wouldn't be personal for the world, but I have seen men with longer necks. When you want to speak to your neighbor, you have to twist your whole body. It makes me die with laughing to see you."

"Delighted to afford you so much amusement. Sorry I make myself so ridiculous! You are excessively polite, I'm sure."

"You were a great deal worse yourself. You said that I"—

"Nothing of the kind. You misunderstood me. I simply remarked"—

"Don't contradict! You said I was an ugly thing, and that it exasperated you only to see me. You did! It makes it worse to deny it. I can't think how you can look me in the face!"

"Why get excited? It's really not worth while, and you will make yourself so hot. It's not becoming to be hot. I was about to say when you so rudely interrupted me that you had misunderstood the meaning of my remarks. I simply observed"—

"I don't care a little bit what you observed. I am not going to talk to you any longer. I am going across the room to mamma. Good afternoon, Captain May. You needn't dance with me at Lady Bolton's this evening, as my hair annoys you so much."

"I shall ask Miss Cunliffe instead. She is a capital waltzer. Your mother is waiting for you at the door. Fourth and sixth, wasn't it, and the first extra? I must ask her at once, as she is so much engaged. Good afternoon, then, Miss Blanchard, if you will go, and, as the good little boys say, 'Thank you so much for a pleasant afternoon.'"

ON THE WAY HOME—HER SOLILOQUY.

"He never thought of such a thing. It never occurred to him to think of me in that light. Hateful creature! And why not, I should like to know? Doesn't he think I'm nice? * * * I never cared for him, but he has no business not to like me. What horrid taste! * * * And to talk of a dozen other girls! That means Lucie Charvie, I suppose, and Adeline Rowe. I have noticed that he dances with them. * * * I don't see why he should like them better than me. I'm the prettiest, and I can be awfully nice if I like. I have never been really nice to him—not my very nicest—or he wouldn't have talked as he did today. * * * I might try the effect this evening. I meant to be offended, but perhaps the other would have more effect. I believe I'll try it. No one can ever say that I am a flirt, but there are occasions when it is a girl's duty to teach a man a lesson, and he had no business to say that about my hair. * * * I wonder if he was right? He has awfully good taste, as a rule. I believe, after all, it would be rather becoming. * * * I'll get Elise to try tonight, and wear my new white dress, and the pearls, and I'll say to him the very first thing that I'm sorry and ask him to dance with me, all the same. Then, when he sees how nice I am, he will be vexed with himself for being so hasty. It will do him no end of good. I'd give worlds if he would only propose to me before the season is over. I'd refuse him, of course, but that wouldn't matter. It would be kind of me to take the trouble, because it is dreadful to see a man so conceited, and if it were not for that he would be quite charming. * * * I'll begin this evening. How exciting! Poor Captain May!"

HIS SOLILOQUY.

"She looked disgracefully pretty. Nothing like putting a girl in a good, stand up rage to see what she's made of. I never knew she had so much in her before. And she would just as soon think of falling in love with the man in the moon, would she? That's pretty tall. Hang it all! Why do they put things in a fellow's head? I was happy enough before, and now this has unsettled me altogether. * * * A man may not want to marry a girl, but that's no reason why she should be so precious indifferent. I always fancied that she had a decided weakness. * * * So she wants to laugh at me, does she? Little wretch! She is always up to some mischief. I wouldn't object if it was at some other fellow, for those dimples are uncommonly fetching. I believe she is right about the collars, all the same—thought so myself more than once. If another shape would suit me better, it seems rather absurd to stick to these. 'Man in the moon,' eh? Humph! Well, it doesn't do to be too awfully sure—it's a bad thing to get into the way of boasting. How would it be if I took her in hand and tried to work a cure? Do her all the good in the world to be brought down a peg or two and find her own level, and the process would not be unpleasant. Hi, cabby! Stop at the first decent hosier's you come to. I want to get out."

WHAT REPUBLICAN MANAGERS MUST FIGURE ON AT ST. LOUIS.

Secretary Joseph Manley of the National Committee Corrects Some Misstatements as to the Size of the Convention—Utah to Have a State Delegation.

One of the curious things about the campaign for delegates to the Republican national convention is the amount of misinformation which is floating around the country in regard to the representation at St. Louis, the total number of votes and the number necessary to a choice. Representatives of the different candidates have given out tables which are misleading, and the newspapers have differed widely in this regard. To settle the matter the secretary of the Republican national committee, Joseph Manley, was asked for the facts based on the proceedings of the committee and the official call.

"This call provides," he said, "that each congressional district shall have two delegates, elected in the usual manner. In addition to these each state is entitled to four delegates at large in its own right and two additional delegates for each congressman at large, if any. In other words, the states will be represented in the convention by twice as many delegates as they have senators and representatives. There are now 90 senators and 357 representatives, or a total of 447, in congress, so the states will have twice that number, or 894 delegates. In addition to these the call provides absolutely for the election of two delegates each from the territories of Arizona, New Mexico and Oklahoma, the District of Columbia and the unorganized Indian Territory and Alaska. This is a total of 12, which makes the convention consist absolutely of 906 delegates.

"When the call was issued, Utah was still a territory and entitled to only two delegates, but since then it has become a state, and it may send six delegates to St. Louis, and they are so included in the figures given. When the roll is made up by the national committee, therefore, the convention should contain 906 delegates, of which 454 would be necessary to a choice. The national committee, however, recommended to the people of Arizona, New Mexico and Oklahoma that they should elect four additional delegates, making the total for each territory six, the same as the smallest state, instead of two, as designated in the call. They were given the full six votes at Minneapolis, and probably there will be no objection to doing so again. There is no provision for extra delegates from the District of Columbia, Indian Territory and Alaska, which must remain content with two, as they have not even a territorial form of government.

"If the additional delegates from the three organized territories are admitted, as will probably be the case, the full convention will consist of 918 delegates, of whom 460 will be necessary to the choice of a candidate. To sum up, therefore, I will say that the convention, when it meets, will have authority under the call to swell its number at once to 918, and this will probably be done at once, although the convention must decide for itself, as the national committee has no further authority in the matter."

Among some of the Republican leaders a strong movement is on foot to cut off Alaska and Indian Territory from representation in future conventions. It is represented that they have but a small fraction of voters and should not be allowed to possess the political influence they now wield. Alaska is a great tract of barren country, for the most part devoid of population, and is not yet even deemed worthy of being organized into a territory. Its chances for statehood are remote, to say the least. Yet Alaska has a member of the national committee, and in all party questions it has as much of a voice as Illinois or New York.

There will be a sentiment cropping out in the convention to deprive Alaska and Indian territory of representation on the national committee, possibly leaving them their delegates in the convention, who are too few to amount to much, but whose strength is wonderfully compounded when transferred to the committee. There is similar opposition in the case of the District of Columbia, though it is not so strong. The Republicans of the District never have an election of any kind except to elect two delegates to the national convention, and one of those two goes on the national committee.

Though representing not a single vote at the election, Colonel Perry Carson, the giant colored man who now represents the district and who probably will again, has just as big a vote in the committee as Clarkson or Manley or ex-Governor Fifer. The representatives of the big states have long chafed over this state of affairs, and there is a formidable movement going on to limit the national committee, which is responsible for the conduct of the campaign, to states only, as they do the voting, leaving the territories to have their say only in the convention.—Chicago Tribune.

SANITARY PLUMBING.

No Feature Should Receive More Attention from Architects.

In the general regret of the passing of artisanship and fine handiwork to make room for cheaper and more pretentious machine work, there is little of this feeling towards plumbing. It is true that the old journeymen were splendid workmen and turned out jobs that are a pleasure to look at. But sanitary science was not understood until a few years ago, and not the most perfect workmanship can make up for a lack of traps that cannot be siphoned, or a lack of adequate ventilation. Within the limit of ten years past, plumbing has made wonderful strides in advance.

PERSPECTIVE VIEW.

In the "Modern Houses" no feature receives more attention from architects and house builders than the sanitary arrangement. So now, among the many practical and utilitarian details of interior construction tending to increase the comfort and convenient arrangement of houses none occupies a more important position than those relating to the fixtures, traps and pipes which introduce and distribute into our buildings a supply of pure water for household use, and afterwards remove from them the semi-fluid foul wastes, designated sewage.

When a man makes up his mind to build, almost his first temptation to cheapen his estimates comes when he gives out his plumbing contracts. It is one of the main items of expense, and he reasons that much of it will be out of sight and evidence, and he is strongly tempted to put the money on aesthetic adornment, rather than on a matter of pure utility. But if this reasoning prevails, the builder will never cease to reproach himself. It is to be taken for granted that no one would so lower the plumbing estimates as to provide a menace to health. But if light-weight and cheap materials are used troubles are never ending—cheap closets, hoppers and faucets are a constant abomination. Laymen do not seem to understand that lead pipe which is subject to constant changes of temperature will decay so that it may be broken almost like decayed leather. The thinner it is the quicker it goes out of all proportion. For this reason, to say nothing of bursting from sudden pressure, cheap lead pipe is the most expensive of all economies. The general adoption of iron instead of lead pipe is a most important improvement only excelled by what it naturally led to—exposed plumbing.

On the ground of sanitary safety, cleanliness, attractiveness and economy, in the long run there is no comparison between exposed plumbing and the old system, where everything was boxed in with wainscoting. It is true that the first cost is rather more, but this should deter no one from adopting it. Closets, washstands and bath tubs that are boxed in form a lurking place for filth and vermin that defy the most thorough housekeepers. The inner surface of the wood, which is always damp and never exposed to fresh air, rots and decays slowly. Although no careful experiments have yet been made, and no statistics have been compiled, medical observers have recently determind that decaying wood is a prolific source of disease. Where the plumbing is exposed there is absolutely no chance for lurking disease germs. The initial cost is a small price to pay for this immunity. Boxed-in plumbing calls for constant renewal, but that that is exposed has practically as long life as the house that shelters it.

To secure a house immunity at all times from sewer gas, and to prevent any subsequent annoyances, have the system of fixtures, traps, supply and waste pipes well planned and arranged in accordance with the best rules. The constant grouping and concentrating of fixtures will materially reduce the cost of the work. Avoid a useless multiplication of plumbing fixtures in sleeping rooms. Plumbing fixtures, especially water closets, must always be located in well lighted and well ventilated apartments. In small cottages plan the bath room as nearly as possible over the kitchen, in order to reduce the amount of piping. Numerous and elaborate plumbing appliances are useless and expensive. The above design is an example of economical and concentrated sanitary plumbing.

The pipes are all exposed so as to be easily accessible in case of leakage. The wash bowls are porcelain with marble slabs, back and sides, and are located in lavatory and bath-room; galvanized iron sink and drain board set on iron legs in pantry; copper boiler in kitchen; two soapstone wash trays in laundry in cellar. The bath-room contains, besides the wash bowl before mentioned, an iron porcelain-lined bath-tub, with hot and cold water supply through combination bath cocks; also an all porcelain front outlet water-closet with tank, chain-pull, etc., complete. All fixtures are trapped and the exposed pipes in the bath-room, including traps, are nickel-plated. The soil pipe runs up through the roof for vent pipe above highest fixtures. There is a three-inch fresh air inlet on this line extending up to grade from the point just back of the trap to a point ten feet from house.

SECOND FLOOR.

Sink and wash tray traps are ventilated separately by two-inch iron pipe extending up above roof. All lead water-service pipes are AA lead pipe.

The above mentioned plumbing will cost about $350, and could be cheapened about $30 by omitting the nickel-plating of pipes in bath-room.

A Chinaman's Indignation.

There is a Chinese laundryman in San Francisco who was convinced that the patrolman who arrested him several nights ago should be committed to an insane asylum. Unmindful of the existence of a municipal ordinance prohibiting laundry work being done after 10 o'clock at night, Wong Sam was busily engaged at the ironing board when arrested. On the way to the station he was informed of the gravity of the offense, and cautioned against ever working at midnight in his laundry.

The desk sergeant was busy when Wong Sam was hustled into the police station. A South Side vagrant was being searched preparatory to being thrown into one of the cells.

"Washa matta him?" asked the laundryman, pointing to the prisoner.

"Vagrincy," replied the patrolman, tersely.

"Washa callee vaglancy?"

"He don't work."

"No workee?" remarked Wong Sam, inquiringly.

"That's it," said the patrolman.

"You p'leecemans heap clazy!" exclaimed Wong Sam, angrily. "One man 'lested no workee. Me heap workee get 'lested alle same. Too much damfoolee. Me tellee my lawyer, he finee you all same quick. You go clazy house, you see."—San Francisco Examiner.

SMOKELESS POWDER.

Its Advantages and Disadvantages For the Sportsman Described.

According to a Sportsmen's Review writer, smokeless powder is confusingly varying. If the rifle is used on a warm day, it shoots with smokeless powder with flat trajectory and great penetration, but on a cold day it seems to be frozen stiff and shoots differently, taking a high trajectory and giving less penetration, and so the smokeless powder user would do well to take a thermometer along marked with the variation of inches in the trajectory. The smokeless powder would be worth the trouble, evidently, because "the bullet fired by 30 grains of the smokeless tore a third larger hole than the bullet fired by 75 grains of black powder." That means that a deer shot in the paunch with a 45 caliber bullet driven by smokeless would die in half the time that one shot with a black powder driven bullet would, because the shock is so much greater with the swifter smokeless ball, which literally flies to pieces.

Another thing about the smokeless powder is not inconsiderable.

"It was as good a hold as ever I made," the experimenter writes, "and the antelope wilted in his tracks. The band bunched up and ran in a semicircle at about the same distance (125 yards) from me, and I got in two more smokeless shots, and then by mistake one of black powder. I knew the latter immediately, for on firing it the 200 animals disappeared in a cloud of smoke that only dissipated as the tail end of the lot bobbed over the hill crest. I had killed every one that I shot at." With all smokeless powder shells, he would have got two more shots anyhow.

In the woods more so than on the plains the smoke of a gun is distressing, especially when the game is on the hustling jump. More than one man has jumped sideways after each shot to get another because of the smoke. A boy using a 45-70 rifle at a deer on an Adirondack runway jumped down a 10 foot bank, striking in waist deep water, that he might get another shot at the deer. The last shot killed the deer as it landed on a rock ready for a leap into thick brush. It was a still day, with no wind, and the five shots fired left a cloud of smoke in the air for 15 minutes after.

Origin of Barber Poles.

An English gentleman of letters has recently evolved from the musty pages of history some new and exceedingly interesting data regarding the origin of the gaudy barber pole. Its first beginnings, this gentleman says, were in the days of the barber surgeons. In early times, the tradition goes, both medicine and surgery were in the hands of barbers, as indeed they continued to be for many centuries afterward. The old theory was that the men of the razor were the worthiest to handle the lancet, and even in the middle ages the lancet was the one great instrument of medicine, as blood letting was one of the chief practices of the time.

In the days of old, during the operation of bleeding the patient used to grasp a stick which the barber surgeon kept ready for use that the pain might be lessened, in just the same way as in the days before chloroform was invented people undergoing a severe operation frequently chewed lead bullets. Around this stick was twined a supply of bandages for tying up the arm of the patient. When not in use, the pole was hung at the door as a sign. In the course of time a painted staff was displayed instead of the one actually used during the operations.

What He Would Do.

She (bidding him good night as the clock strikes 12)—I hate to have you go, Fred.

He—It won't be for long, darling.

She—Yes, I know, but it is so dark.

He—I'm not afraid of the dark, darling.

She—I know you are not. In fact, you seem to prefer it when you call on me.

He—Well, don't you also?

She—Of course I do; but, Fred, there are so many footpads on the street at night that I'm afraid something might happen to you.

He—Oh, I'm not afraid.

She—Have you a pistol?

He—No, not even a cane.

She—Suppose a bad man should stop you while on your way home, what would you do?

He (bravely)—What would I do? Well, I'll tell you what I would do, darling; I would run.—San Francisco Wave.

Rifle Practice at Night.

A luminous foresight for use in a bad light with guns of various kinds has been patented in England by Mr. Winans. A tiny incandescent lamp, supplied with a current from a simple form of battery concealed in the stock, is mounted within a shield at the muzzle of the gun, and a faint ray of light, calculated to indicate the position of its source, is exposed in the direction of the shooter's eye, and this is sufficient to enable him to obtain the required alignment with the back sight and with the target, be it animate or otherwise. The special application of the sight is for game shooting at night and for service purposes—such, for instance, as the illumination of a machine gun used against torpedo attacks during the night.—Army and Navy Journal.

Equal to the Occasion.

The famous motto "noblesse oblige" had a striking exemplification when the Grand Duchess Sergius was presented at the court of St. Petersburg. As that Russian great lady was receiving the imperial kiss from the czarina the string which confined her priceless pearl necklace broke and the pearls rolled down her dress, rattling on the floor like hail. Without looking to the right or left and without noticing the loss of her matchless pearls, the grand duchess retired courtesying from the room. An ordinary woman would have been rattled.—Exchange.

Letter Lists.

Letters remaining uncalled for at the Independence Post Office this date:

Bland, Mrs. Lilly — Julien, Geo. W. 3
Bell, Joseph — Naylor, Geo.
Summerville, Phillip

GEO. S. WOOD, Postmaster.

Be sure you get registered.

A. F. Mairs and J. C. Miller are rusticating in Onion valley.

Registration will close on Saturday the 8th day of August, 1896.

Geo. T. Rives arrived from San Francisco on Wednesday's train.

Charles Parsons and W. Smith were down from Bishop on Monday last.

Mrs. Mary Mulholland returned on Wednesday from her visit at Big Pine.

Miss Isabella Watterson, of Bishop, is on a visit to the Misses Bell at Camp Independence.

P. W. Bennett, Esq., returned on Tuesday last from a visit to Los Angeles and Bakersfield.

Henry La Selle, better known as Modock, died suddenly at Bishop on Tuesday last.

Mr. Morrison, of Los Angeles, is taking a look at Inyo county and figuring upon its future possibilities.

Mrs. A. O. Collins came down on Wednesday's train and is visiting with her daughter, Mrs. B. Rhine.

Mr. Houard will have charge of the Independence Hotel during Mr. Levy's absence at Casa Diablo Springs.

Don't forget the Fair meeting to be held to-morrow evening, at half past seven, in the Pavilion. All are cordially invited to be present.

Only three more weeks in which to register. Either interview Mr. Hession or call upon one of his numerous deputies for that purpose.

Mrs. Wm. Richards and son, of Keeler who have been on a visit to relatives and friends at Red Bluff, returned home on Wednesday last.

Dr. Bicknell, formerly of Camp Independence, now one of the leading physicians of Los Angeles, is visiting the Kern river fishing grounds.

Wm. Miller, Agent for the Mojave and Keeler stage line and knight of the reins for this end of the route, was a visitor at Independence on Thursday.

Carl Walter returned to his home from Keeler on Tuesday morning last, where he had been for the past three months perfecting himself in telegraphy.

The many friends of Miss Minnie Miller, of Lone Pine, who has been so seriously ill for some time past, will be pleased to learn that she is improving.

Miss Etta Naylor returned from Keeler the early part of the week. Miss Naylor had been acting as agent for the Railroad Company during Mr. Richards vacation.

Messrs. Smith, Chancellor, Anderson, Tuft and Lyons, business men of Los Angeles, and Salisbury from Ventura, are enjoying mountain life in the Kern river country.

A new voting precinct was granted by the Board of Supervisors at their last meeting, to be known as Taboose, said precinct boundaries are the same as that of school district of like name.

Paul Houard came in from the Keynot mine a few days ago. He reports Hand & Stanburrough as having quite a lot of gold producing ore on the dump which they will start crushing in a few days.

Among the campers in the vicinity of Mt. Whitney are Messrs. Laberge, Pobst, Laskey and Johnson, and Mrs. Harvey and daughter, Miss Johnson, of Lone Pine, and Miss Frankie Shannon, of Bishop.

Mr. C. Walter, of Camp Independence, has so far this year shipped 35 boxes of peaches besides furnishing parties in and about Independence with the delicious fruit. His early peaches are about all [illegible] resigning any short order [illegible] opposition to his candidacy [illegible]

Quite a number of people from the lower country are seeking rest and recreation in the health-producing climate of the high Sierras of Inyo. The Kern river and Mt. Whitney section cannot be excelled in the grandeur of its scenery and fishing grounds.

Mr. and Mrs. I. H. Mulholland and daughter, Mrs. P. H. Mack and son, Mrs. T. Webb, Miss Stella Hart and Charles Mulholland Jr., left last Tuesday morning for their summer outing in Onion valley. All the ladies of the party wore bloomers, which, to our mind, is a most sensible and comfortable costume for an outing trip in the mountains.

A pleasant surprise party was given Miss Jennie and Clifford Baxter on Tuesday evening last. About 15 couple of our young people marched to the Baxter residence and took possession of the premises. Dancing was the order of the evening and was indulged in until the small hours of the morning. At 12 o'clock an ample supper was served, to which all voiced words of praise.

A few days ago we asked a young lady how a certain party was dressed at a social given a few days before. Her answer rather shocked us (for we are a very modest young man) when she replied, "She wore her sweetest smile." We didn't say much—we were afraid to, as we are bashful, but we are determined to attend the next social if the wardrobe is as diaphanous as that described above.

Corner Stone.

At Big Pine, August 4th, at 10 o'clock a. m., there will be corner stone laying for the M. E. Church now in course of construction. A splendid dinner will be served by the good ladies immediately after the ceremony. Everybody in the valley cordially invited to be present.

Good Returns.

John Basto brought into Independence a few days ago over 63 ounces of gold bullion, valued at nearly $1200, the result of a clean up from the crushing of 12 tons of ore. Mr. Basto is working the Uncle Abe mine, in the Alabama Hills, about 12 miles south of this. The Uncle Abe was a bullion producer years ago when thousands of dollars were taken out. There are several other mines in the same vicinity from which valuable ore is being taken.

Misrepresented.

Lone Pine, Inyo county, boasts of having five apricots that escaped last spring's frost, and all the people about the place are anxiously waiting for these to get ripe, they being the only fruit left in that section.—Bodie Miner.

The Miner has been misinformed as regards our fruit crop. While the late frosts and cold weather destroyed a vast quantity of fruit, yet, there still remain quite a lot of apples, pears, peaches, and a splendid crop of grapes, enough, in fact, to save us from a total failure. Brother McCarty come down from your ice-covered and pneumonia producing burg and bask in the land of sunshine and plenty.

From Aberdeen.

Aberdeen is to have a voting precinct.

Mr. W. B. Moore and family are visiting friends in Bishop.

When Aberdeen petitioned for a bridge the reply was, "Hush, baby, papa cannot afford it this year, wait till you are a little older and we'll see what can be done."

Mrs. May Jones is visiting friends in Bishop.

Messrs. S. Tapman, Ira Calloway and Frank Fuller have gone to Fish Lake valley, Mono county.

AURORA.

The Fair.

After having had a talk with the various business men of this place we have no hesitancy in stating that a Fair will be held at Independence the coming Fall. All of them are in favor of it, and will no doubt contribute liberally for purses for races, and for anything that will tend to make a successful Fair. It is true that our fruit display will not equal that of former years, but we will have enough to show that our District cannot be excelled by any District in the State for size and quality of its fruits. Our display of cereals and vegetables will reach the high standard of former years. A meeting of citizens and the public generally will be held in the Pavilion to-morrow (Saturday) evening at 7:30 o'clock, to devise ways and means, and appoint committees to take the business in charge and bring it to a successful issue. Upon the success of our efforts will greatly depend all working together, hand in hand and shoulder to shoulder, laying all petty jealousies aside, for the common benefit of all. If we do this, our Fair will be a great success.

Kind Words for Judge Arnot

The following from the El Dorado Republican shows the high esteem in which the Judge is held in that county:

"As acting Judge of this county during the sickness, absence or disqualification of our own elected officers, he has occupied the bench in Placerville for perhaps six years during a period of seventeen, and is almost as well known here as our own residents. His manner, methods and decisions on the bench have been characterized by ability, fairness, dignity, urbanity and a sincere effort to maintain the really high character of the judicial office, which is too frequently disgraced by the petty animosities of small men who are unable to free their official acts from the domination of their personal bias or prejudice. We feel quite sure that if the voting population of El Dorado county could be immediately transported in a body to Inyo, they would elect Judge Arnot almost unanimously. As it is the Judge's character has the elements of merited popularity, and it is likely that the people of Inyo will regard him with equal favor. So far we understand that [illegible]

Mountain Spring Canyon.

Mr. A. V. Davidson returned on Thursday morning from Salt Wells valley, where he had been to attend the Assignee's Sale of the borax plant, which he purchased. Mr. Davidson, accompanied by Mr. D. Holland, returned by way of Mountain Spring canyon and Darwin. While coming through the canyon they stopped at the residence of Mr. Wolbrecht and were right royally treated. They also visited the mines in that section and were greatly surprised at the vast quantity of ore, and the size of the ledges in the mines where the work of exploitation had been systematically pursued. Mr. Prewett is developing his valuable mining property, and will soon have completed and in working order a 4-stamp mill, which will be run by a gasoline engine. In his mine the ledge is 20 feet from wall to wall, and the ore is such that it will pay a handsome profit above the expense of working. There is plenty of water in the canyon for domestic use. Mr. Davidson predicts that Mountain Spring canyon will in the near future be the leading gold mining camp of Inyo.

To the People of Inyo County.

YIELDING TO THE IMPORTUNITIES OF my hosts of Inyo County friends expressed in petitions, letters and personally, I hereby offer myself as a candidate for the office of Judge of the Superior Court of Inyo County, at the approaching election in November.

The office being a non-partisan one, and as those who have so cordially invited me to seek the office represent all political parties, it would be pleasing to me to be the candidate of the people irrespective of party.

Respectfully,
N. D. ARNOT.

COMMISSIONER'S SALE ON FORECLOSURE.

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE COUNTY OF INYO, STATE OF CALIFORNIA.

A. J. CHURCH, Plaintiff, vs. JAMES HEROD and O. I. MAIRS, Defendants. — Commissioner's Sale on Foreclosure.

UNDER AND BY VIRTUE OF AN ORDER of sale and decree of foreclosure issued out of the Superior Court of the County of Inyo, State of California, on the 26th day of June, 1896, in the above entitled action wherein A. J. Church, the above-named plaintiff, obtained a judgment and decree against James Herod and O. I. Mairs, defendants, on the 18th day of June, 1896, which said decree was on the 19th day of June, 1896, recorded in Judgment Book No. 1 of said Court, at page 599. I am commanded to sell the land and premises situated, lying and being in the county of Inyo, State of California, and particularly described as follows, to wit:

The East half of the North-west quarter, the North east quarter of Section 3, West half of the North-west quarter, South-east quarter of the North-west quarter, and the South-west quarter of Section 2; the North half of the North west quarter of Section 11, all in Township 10 South, Range 34 East, M. D. M. Also, an equal undivided one-sixth of that certain ditch or canal, known as the Blake and Miller ditch, situate in Inyo county, California, and the same interest in and to the water right thereunto belonging, which said water right or location was made by J. C. Miller, Elias H. Blake and Robert Blake, on October 15th, 1885, and recorded October 23rd, 1885, in Book E of Land, Water and Mining Claims, at page 177, records of said Inyo county, together with all and singular the tenements, hereditaments and appurtenances thereunto belonging, or in any wise appertaining.

Notice is hereby given, that on Monday, the 20th day of July, 1896, at 12 o'clock, noon, of that day, in front of the Court House of said County of Inyo, at Independence in said County, I will, in obedience to said order of sale and decree of foreclosure, sell the above-described property, or so much thereof as may be necessary to satisfy plaintiff's judgment, with interest thereon and costs, to the highest and best bidder for cash, in lawful money of the United States.

JOHN ALEXANDER,
Commissioner.

Dated; Independence, June 25th, 1896.

For Judge.

PAUL W. BENNETT hereby announces that he will be a candidate for the office of Judge of the Superior Court of the State of California in and for the County of Inyo, at the election to be held on Nov. 3, 1896; subject to the decision of the Inyo County Republican Convention.

BURLINGAME, Cal.

"This excellent institution closes its fifth year accredited at both of our universities. Ex-State Superintendent Hoitt is well known in educational matters. Nowhere are boys better cared for.'—San Francisco Call.

Boys' Lies.

It has remained for an English judge to officially and legally establish the ruling that lying is not wrong, at least it is not sufficiently immoral to justify an employer in dismissing a servant. An east end shopkeeper discharged his errand boy, who sued him for a week's wages in lieu of notice. The man justified himself by saying that he found that the boy told lies.

"Nonsense!" remarked Judge Bacon, "All boys tell lies, more or less. It is a habit that is not confined to them."

"But it is wicked," pleaded the shopkeeper.

"Judgment for the plaintiff, with costs," replied the judge.

AUSTRIA'S BARBERS.

They Must Be Apprenticed Three Years and Pass Examination.

The Austrians take no chances with their barbers. They must be good, and the Barbers and Wigmakers' union of Vienna sees to it that they are. Provision is also made in their code for women barbers who desire to carry on the business of their husbands in case of the latters' death or illness.

But in order to do this the wife must have been enrolled in the union as an apprentice for three years. Apprentices, by the rules of the union, must appear in Vienna in the presence of judges of the union and show their skill before they are allowed to open shops of their own.

A properly certified barber must have a knowledge of and pass an examination in shaving, hair cutting, hair curling and wigmaking, and during the period before the issuance of a certificate the poor and others who are frugal serve as subjects for experiment.

At the examination the young men have their razors dulled by four strokes in a pine plank, and they must then sharpen them. A subject is assigned to each, who must be tonsorially perfect, in the opinion of the judges, when the apprentice has released him.

After this a certificate is issued and the apprentice serves two years as a journeyman before he may open a shop as an employer. The average age of apprentices when they begin to learn their trade is 13 years.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Abigail.

The term "abigail," as applied to ladies' maids, originated from the Christian name of Mrs. Masham, better known as Abigail Masham, at first a waiting maid upon Queen Anne and at last the intriguing favorite who supplanted the Duchess of Marlborough in the good graces of that sovereign.

Not Inconsistent.

EVERY ONE CAN SING

INGENIOUS THEORY ABOUT THE TRAINING OF VOICES.

Singing Is Just as Natural as Talking, but the Voice Must Be Cultivated According to Inflexible Rules—Practice Should Begin at the Top of the Voice.

In fairy days when the fox wished to make his voice sweet he went to the miller and asked for chalk. This he ate with such satisfactory results that his next call was made without any of the unlucky effects generally produced by his naturally harsh voice. It is very evident from all that one hears and reads nowadays that this end of the century is expecting to be told of some royal road to voice improvement. Why should not such a road be found? In these days of Roentgen rays and consumption cures why should not the art of music advance tremendously?

The human voice is used for two purposes—by every one to speak with, by many to sing with. That many wish to sing but find themselves unable to do so is unhappily true. That all these could learn to sing is also true, though this is not without question in many minds.

Much has been written lately in criticism of the disagreeable qualities of the speaking voice, especially the harshness of the voices of American women. Little has been suggested, however, to remedy the defects. As for the singing voice, it has lately been stated that "of all branches of musical study the most discouraging perhaps is the cultivation of the voice."

Here is something which interests thousands of persons, and when we include in our subject the improvement of the speaking voice it is one which should interest millions. People are scarce who really care nothing about music. They are scarcer still who do not carry a musical instrument about with them wherever they go. The singer is at no trouble or expense to procure an instrument upon which to perform. All he needs to do is to open his mouth and it is ready. Moreover, this instrument, rightly treated, needs far less practice than any piano or violin, and there is a method of right treatment which can be described to "out of the way students." This method consists of just two things—relax the throat, begin all practice at the top of the voice.

In order to gain a relaxed throat simply try to stretch the throat open, as in yawning, and to sing as low down in the throat as possible. Never imagine that any tones proceed from or go to the top of the head, but think that they all start from a point low in the throat, and must come directly out of the mouth, toward the front teeth. A contracted throat produces a rough, rasping or nasal voice. An open, relaxed throat produces a round, smooth, clear voice.

The second injunction—begin all practice at the top of the voice—is most important. More harm has been done by the training of voices upward than the world has yet any idea, and it is marvelous that we have not learned this fact before the end of the nineteenth century. Scales should never be sung upward by beginners, because this tends to emphasize instead of to bridge over any breaks that the voice may have. By always training the voice downward the difficulties with regard to breaks and registers are overcome without any theorizing and experimenting on the part of the student. An exercise which can be practiced with immense benefit by every student is to begin at the highest tone that the singer can take easily and sing each successive tone downward to the syllable "ha" low down in the throat as possible, using a great deal of breath for each syllable and taking fresh breath for each one.

Besides the question how best to improve the singing voice, persons are seeking answers to two other questions—how can we improve our speaking voices and can we all learn to sing?

The speaking voice can be made pleasant and agreeable in the same way that the singing voice is improved. It is most emphatically true that many persons speak habitually in tones that are unnecessarily shrill and rasping. This is caused by throat contraction, which squeezes the tone and renders it rough. To relax the throat by stretching it open as in yawning and to speak low in the throat allows the tone to be smooth, round and clear. A very unwise injunction is often given in this connection—viz, "Do not speak in such a high key." The very opposite of this should be inculcated. Voices are never shrill because they are high; they only sound shrilly because the throat is apt to be contracted more on high tones. This weakens the high tones and the effort to speak loudly causes forcing of the voice. If people would relax the throat and then strengthen the high tones by their free and proper use, they would soon notice a vast improvement in tone quality.

"Can every one learn to sing?" Unquestionably, yes. Every one who can speak can also learn to sing, if he will take a little trouble, for the very same instrument, the larynx, furnishes the voice for both speech and song. The only difference between the speaking voice and the singing voice is that the former uses the lower and medium tones and the latter uses chiefly the higher and medium tones. If a person thinks he cannot sing, let him, in the first place, be satisfied to begin at the beginning, instead of at the end. Let him not be discouraged because he cannot at once sing a whole tune correctly, but let him believe that, if, as must be the case, he can form any single tone or two tones correctly, he can improve upon this ability, just as any one who can add two and two can also add three and three, and then four and four. The main thing to understand is that inability to sing is not generally caused, as is so often supposed, by want of voice or want of ear, but simply by lack of flexibility of voice—that is, weakness of the muscles which tighten and relax the vocal cords.—New York Herald.

There is this difference between a wise man and a fool. The wise man expects future things but does not depend upon them and in the meantime enjoys the present, remembering the past with delight, but the life of the fool is wholly carried on to the future.—Epicurus.

"To catch a weasel asleep" is indicative of the extreme vigilance of these animals, who are disturbed and made wide awake by any sound, however slight.

RIDING A WHEEL OF GOLD.

Lillian Russell Now Has a Bicycle to Match Her Hair.

About a year ago an Eastern wheel manufacturer presented Lillian Russell, the comic opera beauty, with a bicycle which was lavishly plated with gold. This machine has now given place to one made by a Western firm. The new wheel is much more expensive than the one discarded, the cost being put at $1,400. Every part of the wheel which could be plated has three layers of gold, and the value of the bullion used in the plating process was $800. In general appearance it is not unlike other wheels of the '96 models. There are, however, two exceptions, both of which emanated from suggestions made by the diva when she was in the West recently with her company. One is in the saddle, which is somewhat smaller than the average lady's saddle, and has concealed in the rear a set of springs. Again, the handle bars are nearer the rider than ordinarily. This is accomplished by having the bar which runs from the drop a trifle shorter and inclined toward the rider at a greater angle. Another feature of the machine is the total absence of guards of any kind. Every part of the wheel has Miss Russell's name engraved on it. This even extends to the delicate spokes, each of which is emblazoned with the owner's name on the triple plating of gold. The rims are, of course, devoid of plating. They are made of curly maple and polished to brilliancy. The cyclometer was included in the plating, as was also the lamp, which, by-the-by, is lighted with electricity from a small but strong storage battery.

Miss Russell, while riding her golden bicycle near Central Park, New York collided with an unknown cyclist and was thrown to the pavement. Her costly wheel was smashed and her ankle was hurt. Riders in the vicinity of the place where the accident occurred witnessed a blur of bicycle fragments, hosiery and fluttering lace. Then they rushed to the singer's assistance. The golden wheel was as if it were a game of jackstraws in which the trick was to pick out the back bone.

AN EARLESS BOY.

Also He Has a Fish Mouth and No Chin—Freak for Museums.

A freak of nature in the shape of a 16-year-old boy without ears has been discovered at East Brady, a little town on the Allegheny River. The lad is Frank Collins. Until recently he was an inmate of the Duncanville poorhouse. For several years museum managers have been after him, but the poor authorities refuse to allow him to be exhibited. As he is now over 16 they think he will not be ill-treated and have decided to "rent" him until he is of age.

HE HATH NO EARS TO HEAR.

In addition to having no ears, he has a fish mouth and is deaf and dumb. The sides of his head are smooth except where the lobe of the ear should be. At this spot there is a slight growth that projects above the side of the head. His forehead is low. The top of the head slopes until it reaches the back of the cranium. He has little or no chin and his mouth projects to such an extent that it has the appearance of the mouth of a fish. His head is covered with a sparse growth of thin hair. The remainder of the lad's body is perfect. His hands and feet are very small.

A Boy's Compliment.

It was at a Narragansett hotel, where Mrs. Yznaga, the mother of the Duchess of Manchester and Lady Lister-Kaye, was spending the summer. There was the usual crowd of children in the house, who were all gathered in their own particular parlor one rainy day playing a game the dramatis personæ of which included a queen.

"So the queen went and stayed at a boarding house," said one child, continuing her majesty's adventures. Another, with a more definite idea of the habits of royalty, expostulated. "Queens don't go to boarding houses," she said.

"Mrs. Yznaga's here and she's a queen!" retorted a little boy triumphantly. And he really thought it.—Exchange.

When Economy Economizes.

"Will it pay?" should be the first question asked when looking over the old clothes with a view to making over. Time should be considered first, and if it can be put to a better use then let the garment go and buy a new one. If time will permit, then consider whether the garment will look well enough when completed to be satisfactory. Will it have a shabby, made over look, and, if so, will a quantity of new material remove that objection? Then consider the expense of the new goods, make a few figures if necessary, and, once deciding that it is a paying investment, rip, cleanse and make, with a hearty faith in the good results.—Ladies' Home Journal.

MIND YOUR EYE.

What You Should Avoid if You Desire to Preserve Your Sight.

As nature has endowed each one of us with only one pair of eyes and will not duplicate them when injured, the following half score of "don'ts" should not only be indelibly impressed on our memories, but be religiously remembered:

Dr. G. Sterling Ryerson, professor of ophthalmology in Trinity Medical College, Toronto, says: "Myopia being essentially a condition due to abuse of the eye, one is constantly obliged to say don't to patients. It occurs to me that it might be useful to put these prohibitory rules in aphoristic form:

"1. Don't read in railway trains or in vehicles in motion. 2. Don't read lying down or in a constrained position. 3. Don't read by firelight, moonlight or twilight. 4. Don't read by flickering gaslight or candlelight. 5. Don't read books printed on thin paper. 6. Don't read books which have no space between the lines. 7. Don't read for more than fifty minutes without stopping, whether the eyes are tired or not. 8. Don't hold the reading close to the eyes. 9. Don't study at night, but in the morning when you are fresh. 10. Don't select your own glasses at the outset.

"It would almost seem as though some of these rules were too obvious to require mention, but practical experience shows that most people abuse their eyes just in the way stated.

"In short, anything which tends to increase the quantity of blood in the organ favors the increase of the defect, leading in extreme cases to detachment of the retina and blindness."—Canadian Lancet.

Kerosene's Many Uses.

Kerosene oil is in a house for many purposes besides burning in lamps. It is said it will take iron rust and fruit stains from almost any kind of goods without injuring the fabric. Wash the stained part in kerosene as you would in water. The spots must be washed in the kerosene before they have been put into soap and water, or it will do no good. In washing windows or mirrors, if two or three teaspoonfuls of kerosene be put into the water the work will be done more quickly and with better results.

Its Cheapness Proved.

The argument from experiment or observation, known as a posteriori, is illustrated by the Chicago Inter Ocean:

Mrs. Nuwed—I am certain that beautiful vase the Carters gave us when we were married must be very inexpensive.

Mr. Nuwed—What makes you think so?

Mrs. Nuwed—Bridget has dusted it four times, and it's not even cracked."

Invulnerable.

The girl confronted him without faltering. In her defiance she was magnificent.

"Do your worst," she cried. "I am not a new woman. I am neither married nor engaged. I do nothing to conceal my age. I never bathe in the surf. I do not shop. I haven't the remotest idea if I can cook or not."

With a snort of baffled rage the humorist fled.—Detroit Tribune.

An Odd Antediluvian.

Dick Hicks—And did it all without a yachting cap.—Minneapolis Tribune.

MAJOR W. W. ROBBINS.

Framer of the Indiana Military Bill Made Well by Paine's Celery Compound.

Major Robbins of the 2nd Indiana State guards, aide on Gen. McKee's staff and president of camp Gray, has been for two years one of the most influential members of the Indiana legislature and the author of the famous Indiana Military Law of 1889.

Major Robbins was a very sick man up to the time of taking Paine's celery compound.

In proof of what that remarkable remedy can do to make a sick person strong and well, Major Robbins' letter from Indianapolis best tells its own straightforward story.

"I was troubled with a torpid liver, constipation and the accompanying sallow complexion, while my entire nervous system was entirely deranged, and I was greatly reduced in flesh. While in this condition I was taken down with a very severe attack of the grip, and was, for a long time, confined to the house and my bed.

"I resorted to various medicines and tonics, and under their temporary influence made several attempts to resume my business of traveling about in the interests of A. Steffen, cigar manufacturer of this city; but relapse succeeded relapse, and I not only was obliged to abandon my business, but growing gradually worse, became apprehensive of the ultimate result.

"At this juncture, my mother-in-law, who had used your remedy with gratifying results, prevailed upon me to commence taking Paine's celery compound, and it gives me great pleasure to state that I at once began to feel its beneficial effects.

"My appetite, which had failed me, returned, my constipation ceased, and very soon my liver became normal in its action. Following this my sleeplessness and headaches ceased, and I began to gain flesh. The insidious hold on me that the grip had hitherto had was relaxed, and I felt invigorated and strengthened, so I could resume my vocation, and feel free from the languid, enervated feeling that had so long possessed me.

"My friends were pleasantly surprised with the change in my condition, and I was only too happy to recommend Paine's celery compound to such of my acquaintances as were suffering from any of the complaints which so complicated my case. Therefore, I again say I feel impelled by a deep sense of gratitude to express how much I have been helped, for I now feel and look like a new man."

Physicians who rely on Paine's celery compound—as thousands of the most wide-awake members of the profession are doing, especially now that nearly every one feels the need of a genuine spring remedy—physicians know very well what that languor and that tired feeling means. They know that debility today often results in nervous prostration tomorrow, unless the tired system is quickly invigorated.

That is why all over the country today Paine's celery compound is being taken by the advice of skilled pysicians. It is the one remedy that physicians can conscientiously call a genuine spring remedy. Try it.

THE LAST APPEARANCE OF MOLIERE.

[It is recorded of Moliere that on the night of his death he insisted on going to the theater, as usual, despite the entreaties of his friends, to play the "Malade Imaginarie" in order that the workmen might not lose their wages.]

Did you who sat that night to see
The wizard's hand complete its task
Guess at the face of Tragedy
Which lurked behind the comic mask?
Did you, whose plaudits wild and loud
Mixed fate and laughter in a breath,
Behold the actor as he bowed,
Crown'd with the cypress wreath of death?

Across the footlights of the years
That latest scene shines fresh and bright.
Only the lamps are blurred with tears,
Only the laughter falls tonight—
And, lo! before our startled eyes
Two centuries dwindle to a span,
And other silent plaudits rise
Not for the genius, but the man.

Actor, there gleams above thy tomb
No censer which the church can swing;
No incense, with its dim perfume,
Haunts thy dark rest with dreams of spring.
But surely blessings more divine
Upon that last appearance fell
And, with the latest bravos thine,
Mingled the angels' "It is well."

And, all unwitting, we today
Tread in thy footsteps, Moliere.
We laugh and wonder at the play
Or strut behind the footlights' glare.
The shouts of laughter grow more sparse,
The lamps burn dim, the players flee,
And Death takes up our petty farce
And sobers it to tragedy.

—Nellie K. Blissett in Temple Bar.

WANTED.

"An ugly case," remarked Jim to me confidentially; "a very ugly case indeed!"

The unconscious patient, borne into our surgery upon a stretcher, was frightfully injured. That was evident at a glance.

He was a passenger by a ship just arrived from the Cape, and while preparing to come ashore a heavy box, swung aloft by the vessel's crane, had slipped and fallen on him.

Jim Clifford and I were partners in an east end practice, close to the docks.

His blood soaked clothing bore no marks which could lead to his identification.

No limbs were broken, but the neck and shoulder were fearfully lacerated, and one side of the face was dreadfully mangled. It was not until late the following evening that he seemed to recover his senses, and then of course he was too weak to converse.

Jim was strongly in favor of his removal, as soon as practicable, to the nearest hospital. The sick man must have overheard our conversation, for he signed feebly to my colleague to stoop down.

"Not to the hospital, for heaven's sake!" whispered the poor fellow. "Anywhere but there. Stay here—no friends—soon be better!" he gasped painfully.

Neither of us had the heart to remove our patient against his will, though his stay involved one of us being constantly in the house and the services of a male attendant as well.

Days and weeks slipped by, and, though our patient hovered between life and death more than once, he continued to stay with us and to engross more or less of our attention.

The singular thing was that apparently the patient was without relatives or friends in this country—did not know a soul in London. So he told us, bit by bit, adding that his name was Octave Henry, and that he had been in South Africa for many years. A couple of rude sea chests, sent up from the ship, contained all his belongings.

"I'll tell you what it is," said Jim in his own emphatic way as we sat together in our snuggery one night, "I'll tell you what it is, Fraser, our friend up stairs will slip through our fingers after all if we don't look out. There's brain mischief setting in from some splintered bone, and unless we can do something to remove the brain pressure—well, goodby to his chance of life!"

Our patient willingly gave his consent to the operation, and the whole affair was arranged and carried out within a week.

Recovery from the operation of trepanning is always tardy. In the case of the man Henry, with his already shattered physique, it was more than usually protracted.

One morning I remember well. Clifford and I were by the bedside. The patient, for the time being, had revived sufficiently to show himself conscious of our presence and feebly to sign his wants.

But there was something about the appearance of his eyes that morning which struck me as being unusual, a curious, preoccupied look. When Jim and I had left him to the care of his attendant, I remarked upon this symptom.

"You noticed it, then?" answered Jim moodily. "I thought you would. Ah, but that is only one aspect of the case, not the most serious either!"

Here he broke off abruptly. I waited, without speaking, till he began once more:

"Did you ever study the subject of sense transference?"

I confessed that I had not done so to any great extent.

"It begins to occur to me," continued Jim, "that that is what we have to deal with in the case—nothing more or less. However it has happened, one thing is very plain to me—that the sense of hearing in this case is not absolutely destroyed, but, as I may put it, diverted into the optic region—grafted, as it were, into the sense of sight."

"But is such a thing possible?" I exclaimed anxiously.

"Yes, theoretically it is," returned my partner gravely, "but practically no example of it has yet occurred in the case—that is, of a human being. I can only guess that in the present instance purely accidental causes have led up to it. But the fact remains that, as I have just said, the man now sees—actually sees, remember—that which, in ordinary circumstances, he would have heard."

My colleague's diagnosis proved to be true, as we soon found. Little by little, as consciousness returned, it became painfully evident that the patient's senses had become what I may call, for want of a better word, entangled.

With what startling vividness such sensations thus took bodily shape before him we could only surmise from his excited manner. Sensitive to an extraordinary degree to every breath, every whisper around him, his staring eyeballs too plainly showed how the faculty of vision was exalted, in his case, to a preternatural extent.

"Please, sir," said a maidservant at the door; "please, sir, Dr. Clifford wants you up stairs at once."

Clifford and the attendant were holding down the patient by main force upon the bed. He was struggling to rise, and the expression of his face was one of terror. His eyes seemed as if starting from their sockets.

"Something has induced a violent paroxysm," whispered Jim. "He can't last long if it continues."

The sick man sank back on his pillows. His lips moved. By stooping over him I could catch some of his words.

"They are coming—coming now," he gasped, "ever so far away, but I can see them! Something moves before them—something dark! I can't make it out! Something about to break! Will it save poor Octave? Will it"—

"Visibly worse," said Clifford aside to me, "and the pulse abnormally high. If this goes on, he will be in a high fever before long."

It was a breathless summer evening, but the sky was overcast with murky clouds, foreboding a tempest. The room already grew dark with the shadow of its coming.

Suddenly there was a loud knocking at the front door. Presently I heard voices in conversation, then heavy footsteps began to ascend the stairs.

At that instant a rose colored flash gleamed through the darkness of the room, a terrific peal of thunder followed, its echoes crashing and rolling as if the building were about to fall upon our heads. The sick man sprang convulsively to an almost upright position in his bed, then fell backward—dead!

The door opened. There was a pause, and two plainly dressed men slipped quietly into the room.

"Dr. Clifford, I presume?" inquired the foremost politely.

Jim nodded assent wonderingly.

"I have a very painful duty to perform in respect of your patient here," continued the speaker fumbling a paper as he spoke; "a very painful duty indeed. But the fact is, I hold a warrant for his apprehension under the name of Henry—Octave Henry—on a charge of"—

"My patient," interposed Jim very quietly, "has just obeyed another summons. The man died while you were coming up stairs."

From the explanations which ensued it seemed that our late patient had long been "wanted" by the police on no less a charge than that of murder. Doubtless his unwillingness to be removed to a hospital arose from his persuasion that he was safer from detection in a private dwelling.

Guilty or not guilty of the crime he was accused of, it was long before Jim and I ceased to speak of him. Nor, in turn, had he forgotten us. We were handsomely remembered in the will he had executed before the operation. But we will never again undertake the care of a resident patient.—Answers.

Old English Inns.

A feature essentially English is the cheery inn that overlooks the common. From that upper latticed window the jolly innkeeper of yore would watch the solitary horseman of romance crossing the heath and perhaps hint his opinion of the traveler to the "gentlemen of the road"—the Claude Duvals—who found it convenient to keep on good terms with mine host. But those days are gone, and now we can take our ease at our inn, with its deep bay windows on either side of the entrance, its swinging signpost, its horse trough, pump and outdoor settle. Enter and you will find that the bay window forms a delightful sunny recess with a seat all round. In one instance a branch of a vine from the adjoining greenhouse had been trained into this recess, and round the window bunches of grapes were hanging, some beginning to purple in the warm August sun. The fireplace is often a great, old fashioned one, with seats on either side of the "ingleneuk," right under the chimney, while framed over one of these fireplaces I found the following verse from Sir Matthew Hale:

A Sabbath well spent
Brings a week of content
And health for the toils of the morrow,
But a Sabbath profaned,
Whate'er may be gained,
Is a certain forerunner of sorrow.

—Temple Bar.

Dr. Nansen's Pedigree.

Dr. Fridtjof Nansen's name being now mentioned all over the world, his pedigree has been the subject of recent research. The result is that the earliest of the forbears of the Norwegian navigator of whom there is authentic knowledge was Ewert Nansen, a merchant at Flensburg, in Sleswick-Holstein, who died in 1613. So it is stated in the "Genealogia Nanseniana," which is contained in an important collective work by Christopher Giessing (Copenhagen, 1781). Ewert Nansen's son Hans went with his uncle on a merchant ship to Russia, became afterward interpreter of the Russian language at the court of the king of Denmark and later on a special Danish envoy to the czar. Subsequently, as chairman of the Icelandic Trade society, he made many voyages to Iceland and Russia and wrote in Danish a "Compendium Cosmoraphicum Danicum," which had many editions (1633-46). All the other Nansens are traced from these ancestors, one of the first of whom thus showed already a bent for traveling and for writing on his travels. A clear case of hereditary character, going back to two centuries and a half! Only it is to be hoped that Ibsen will leave the subject alone and not write a drama called "The Man From the Sea."—Pall Mall Gazette.

GREAT YEAR IN SPORT

AMERICAN ATHLETES AFTER EVERYTHING IN SIGHT ABROAD.

Representatives of Many Sports Hope to Earn Glory Across the Seas—Yale Will Be Seen at Henley—The Niagara Will Again Race For Glory and Prizes.

The present year will be a remarkable one in the history of athletic sports because of the number of athletes and sportsmen who will seek honor on the other side of the water. There has never been a year when Americans have seemed to have such an excellent chance of covering themselves with glory. Collectively, the men of sports who propose to invade Europe with brawn and brains would make quite a respectable army. They go to seek fame at the race course, in the prize ring, on the bicycle path, on the athletic field, on the river and on the open seas.

International competition received a boom last year from the visit of the Cornell crew to England and the London and Cambridge athletes to New York. The Cornell boys failed to get much glory, but the New Yorkers just wiped the earth with the Britishers in the athletic games of all sorts, and this more than evened things up. America is represented by many world's champions. She has no peer at any kind of a game, and there is no reason to fear that the athletes who will cross the water this year will not properly represent her.

Perhaps the most remarkable feature of the invasion will be seen on the turf. Americans will be represented by home bred horses in nearly every event of importance on the English race courses. Montauk, the crack 3-year-old, owned by Mr. Richard Croker, is a prominent candidate for the English Derby. Rey el Santa Anita, winner of the American Derby in 1893; Sir Excess and Rey del Carreres, all well known and high class performers in this country, will also represent Mr. Croker. The racing colors of August Belmont, Pierre Lorillard, Duke & Wishard and Charles Littlefield will also be seen on the English turf. Ramapo, winner of the Suburban in 1894, is in Duke & Wishard's string.

Among the pugilistic stars who will visit England are Kid Lavigne, acknowledged champion lightweight of America; Bob Fitzsimmons, champion middleweight of the world; Steve O'Donnell, Johnny Lavack and many other clever ones. Kid Lavigne meets Dick Burge, who is regarded in England as invincible. Steve O'Donnell is billed to fight Owen Sullivan.

The defeat of Cornell last year has made American colleges keen to avenge the unfortunate Ithacans. Yale is regarded as the peer of all the others in rowing and will send a crew to Henley, and Americans will root hard to see the famous blue sculled to victory.

Many prominent professional bicycle riders, including John S. Johnson, Ray McDonald and George Banker, will tour through England, France and Germany in search of glory and prizes.

Teams from the Boston Athletic association and Princeton college are represented in the great Olympian games at Athens.

On the blue water America will be represented principally by the yacht Niagara, owned by Howard Gould. Niagara won many races last year, and there are still victories in store for her.

American trotters will be seen in France and Germany, large consignments of rare bred stock having been shipped during the winter. In short, there will be American competition in all branches of sport in Europe this year, and with an even break and no favors Uncle Sam's athletes will more than hold their own. John Bull had better lay in a good stock of excuses. He may need them before the sporting season ends in England.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Higher Education at Carey's Run.

The programme for an evening entertainment at the close of a term of school at Carey's Run, O., included a four round sparring match between John Mershon and James Lavender, the latter from a rival school district. Both men were present in full fighting costume, but Hiram Jordan, school director, interfered. The entertainment was consequently limited to declamations, readings and singing. Jordan was the only man present who objected to this unusual combination of science with literature and art, and he narrowly escaped mobbing. He had promised not to interfere.—Chicago Tribune.

Needle In Him Forty-two Years.

Dr. Sharp, the Ohio state prison physician, recently removed from the body of James Morris, a federal prisoner, from Newark, O., a needle which he swallowed when he was a boy, 11 years old, 42 years ago.

Morris says the needle has pained him at different times and in different parts of his body all his life, and it was at one time in his right knee.

An Experiment In High License.

Boston is about to make an experiment in high liquor license. Sixty hotels will be called on to pay $2,000 each instead of $1,500, as formerly, and the tax of retail dealers will be $1,000 each. These are said to be the highest licenses yet required in this country.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Big Men of Lilliput.

Admiral Dot, the well known dwarf, who has exhibited himself all over the world, now runs a hotel at White Plains, N. Y. Major Atom, also in the same category, is the admiral's night clerk. They are the smallest bonifaces in the country, but they do a big business for all that.

And There Are Lots of Them.

ANTHONY HOPE ENGAGED.

His Fiancee Evelyn Millard, Who Plays In His "Prisoner of Zenda."

A dispatch from London states that Anthony Hope (Hawkins), the author, is engaged to Evelyn Millard, the young English actress who is at present playing the Princess Flavia in Mr. Hope's play, "The Prisoner of Zenda," at the St. James theater. The report was confirmed in New York by friends of the novelist. Miss Millard is described as an extremely pretty and accomplished actress. She made her debut three years ago in George Alexander's revival of "The Second Mrs. Tanqueray" in the title role. Since that time Miss Millard has had important roles in Mr. Alexander's productions. When he secured the English rights for "The Prisoner of Zenda," Edward Rose and Mr. Hope superintended the dramatization of it. At Mr. Hope's request Miss Millard was selected to take the leading role. She made a hit, and Mr. Hope fell in love with her.

ANTHONY HOPE.

Anthony Hope Hawkins is the son of the Rev. E. C. Hawkins, rector of St. Bride's, London. His uncle is Sir Henry Hawkins, famous as the "hanging judge." The author is 35 years old. He is a lawyer by profession.—New York Sun.

BRAVE MAN, BRAVE DEED.

One of Custer's Fighting Soldiers Given a Medal by Congress.

Theodore W. Goldin, clerk of the circuit court of Janesville, Wis., has been presented with a bronze medal inscribed: "The Congress to Private Theodore W. Goldin of Troop G, Seventh United States Cavalry, For Most Distinguished Gallantry at the Little Big Horn River, Montana, July 26, 1876." General J. B. Doe, assistant secretary of war, presented the medal in the name of the president of the United States.

Colonel Goldin was a private in General Custer's fighting Seventh. When General Reno's command was besieged by 300 Indians, the wounded soldiers suffered under the blazing sun from a terrible thirst. Private Goldin, then a raw recruit, volunteered with three others to go down the bluff with a big camp kettle for water. All four came back, but the camp kettle, which they dragged between them, was pierced with bullets. Had it not been for canteens slung about their shoulders they would have brought back no water.

Long ago the other three men were decorated by congress. Colonel Goldin's modesty prevented the details of his achievement from being known, but his comrades were not content to let him remain in the background.

WOULD ABOLISH CONGRESS.

New York Business Men Say It Hinders the Return of Prosperity.

There is a movement proposed among the business men of New York to abolish congress. They insist that the country will never recover its prosperity until jingo agitation ceases and the tariff is let alone. They say that every session of congress injures the country to the extent of hundreds of millions of dollars, which is directly due to attempts to make political capital in debate and legislation.

In the last congress it was the tariff, a prolonged agitation which unsettled commercial and industrial affairs and made it impossible for people to do business. This time it was first the Armenian question, then Venezuela and then Cuba, which has destroyed confidence to such an extent that everybody who has money locks it up in a safety vault, and those who haven't any are unable to earn it.—William E. Curtis in Chicago Record.

SPORT UP TO DATE.

A cablegram from Athens says 250 foreign athletes are entered for the Olympian games.

Kansas City is to have a 30 day turf meeting beginning May 23, with an announced total distribution of $35,000 in added money.

Albert Schock has gone to London, where he will compete in the six day bicycle race to be held there next month.

The Indianapolis Driving club has decided to give a running meeting the last of May, with $10,000 in stakes and purses. The trotting and pacing meeting will be given Aug. 17-22, and $40,000 has been voted for purses.

President Elliott of the League of American Wheelmen announces that by a unanimous vote of the executive committee of the L. A. W. it is decided to reduce the sanction fee for open race meets from $10 to $5, and $2 for each additional day. This fee was raised from $2 by the national assembly. The fee of $25 for national circuit race meets remains the same.

Here is the way Frank McKee now talks of his star baseball actor: "Anson was such a frappe that every time he entered the theater the steam pipes perspired ice water. He is such a chill that he could put on a linen duster and a golf hat and discover the north pole."

A rumor comes from New York that many of the leading bicycle manufacturers have combined aganst racing teams and agreed not to support any this season. But there are a few racing teams already signed.

A BATH IN FINLAND.

AN IMPORTANT AFFAIR THAT TAKES PLACE ONCE A MONTH.

In a Public Bathhouse an Old Woman Turns on the Steam, and the Whole Village Population Is Cleaned—Then Comes a Siesta In the Cold Air.

If you lived in as cold and uncomfortable a country as Finland, it is highly probable that you would never take a bath. Therefore you will appreciate this remarkable story, which proves the great virtue and bravery of the Finns. There are Finns no doubt who bathe every day; but, like the most of the real heroes of this world, they live and die in obscurity, unhonored and unsung.

There are, on the other hand, no Finns who do not take at least one bath a month. And this is a pretty high average when you consider that for all France the average is one bath a year for every Frenchman, and in Germany the average is seven-tenths of a bath a year for every German, and in England the average is one-half a bath a year for every Englishman. These are thin and poor averages when compared with the Finnish average of 12 baths a year a person.

But it is not the number of baths that is so interesting as the Finlander's method of taking those baths. Of course, even in such centers of civilization as Keitele, the people have long ceased to be quaint. But take a village like Trasborg, which is tucked away in an obscure corner of the banks of Ulea Trask, and you find the ancient and honorable Finnish bathing custom in full force.

On the banks of the lake about a quarter of a mile from the huddle of huts called Trasborg you will see a small log house with no windows and apparently with no door. All around the outside of this queer hut runs a bench, the back of which is the wall of the hut and the seat a single board supported by uprights.

There is no chimney. There is a box like a sentry shelter at a little distance from the hut, and it is from this box that an underground passage leads to the interior of the cabin.

On a certain day you will see a huge fire blazing near this cabin, and after it has been going for several hours you will observe that the old woman who has been watching the fire will reach into it with a huge pair of tongs and lift out a bowlder. The bowlder is red-hot.

She will drag this into the box and so through the underground passage. She will lay it finally in the center of the earthen floor of the cabin, and so she will go on, dragging redhot bowlders out of the fire and piling them up in a mound in the center of the cabin floor. When she has brought the last bowlder, she has a large mound, and the cabin is beginning to warm up.

In a corner of the cabin stands a huge barrel of water. She dips a bucket into the barrel and throws the water on the mound of rocks. Steam bursts from it. When she has thrown on half a dozen buckets, the cabin is choked with steam.

The joyous bathers begin to arrive. While the old woman has been making the steam the villagers have been getting ready. In every family there has been a grand disrobing.

And now from every hut burst the inhabitants, clad only in the simple, tight fitting and innocent garments with which nature has provided all her children. The weather is cold, bitter cold. But the hardy Finnish men, women and children are not disturbed.

They leap over the frozen ground, shouting with laughter and going at full speed to keep their blood circulating. The Finns are far from lovely to look upon, even when swathed in their winter garments of fur. In a state of nature they would never attract offers from painters or sculptors seeking models.

But they are so frank and so cheerful and so happy that one does not mind their squat bodies, their rolls of fat, their coarse and greasy skins. So they go bounding to the common bathhouse of the village, running races, tripping one another, jostling one another aside. All are in the merriest possible mood.

There is quite a scramble at the door of the sentry box, as so many arrive at the same time. But gradually they disappear until the whole village population is lying or sitting about on the shelves that line the interior walls of the cabin. The mothers have brought the babies. Not a soul is left in the village huts. It is a deserted village.

There are lively times in the bathhouse, as you may imagine. The women are all on one side, the men on the other, and forms can just be dimly made out by the dim tallow dip that sheds a faint, smoky light. The place is full of steam, and the temperature is away up toward blood heat. Hour after hour the ingenuous Finns lounge or sleep or gossip. They stay until they are thoroughly boiled out and the room begins to get chilly.

Then they sit outside the house on the bench. They do not mind the freezing air. They lounge about as if it were summer time, smoking, drinking, feeling clean and light hearted.

They do not destroy this pleasure by indulging too often. Once a month is often enough. Thirty days of quiet and then one day of the full, round joy of perfect cleanliness is just about right for keeping the balance adjusted.—Boston Post.

Surprises of Travel.

A noble English lady who was over here several years ago and who was entertained by a number of prominent New Yorkers said one day to a countrywoman of ours:

"Everything here was such a surprise to me! Why, there are some houses where I have been in New York that are really very handsome."

"Yes," returned the other, "there are several that are fairly comfortable." And nobody even smiled.

ILLUMINATED FACES.

A Novel Lamp Shade on Which Are Pasted Photographs.

The very latest thing in lamp shades becomes a picture frame as well. Colored photographs make the best effect, and those of platinum or sepia finish make the second choice. If unmounted, they are easier to handle. But nothing is necessary beyond the cardboard foundation and a sufficient number of faces to make a goodly showing.

Stagestruck young women select cards of their favorite actor in different characters, and so get illuminated views. Less enthusiastic girls are content with faces of their feminine friends.

In either case the process is the same. The shade proper of cardboard is first made upon a wired frame. That done, ovals of correct size and in sufficient number are cut, the pictures are laid in place and pasted over the back with thin muslin to hold them firm. As a finish a twisted ribbon with bows is painted about each frame and round the edges, or if the maker has sufficient skill a jeweled band is made to take its place.—New York Journal.

Black Nightgowns Are the Latest.

New York women are wearing black tulle nightgowns. The material is black tulle and is so made up as to show the soft, graceful folds that are possible only to such a delicate and diaphanous fabric.

A deep rolling collar which forms a V at the neck is edged by a frill of rich black lace and is already recognized by clever women as a most becoming arrangement for a plump white throat. Folds of tulle sweep across the front of the gown, while the material is brought up at the left side beneath the collar and caught by a wide bow of cream white gauze ribbon. From this the tulle falls straight to the bottom in folds that cling closely to the figure, the bottom itself being untrimmed.

The sleeves are put in very full, but fall only to the elbow, where they are caught in and joined to a deep fall of lace. The last touch of color is supplied by the monogram of the wearer, elaborately wrought in cream colored silk at the left of the front.

This particular ornament is considered altogether indispensable by the devotees to this latest specimen of the most choice and exclusive lingerie. Extraordinary and unusual as they may seem, black nightgowns promise soon to become the reigning fad among fashionable dames.—Chicago Tribune.

A Sermon on Hat Trimming.

Some time ago a London clergyman, in the course of a sermon, thus addressed the women in the congregation: "Some of you, my friends, followers of the gentle Christ, come to worship wearing great plumes or 'ospreys' in your hats and bonnets. Do you realize that this aigret plume only grows on the bird at the time of nesting, and that to obtain one such feather involves the cruel death not only of the beautiful white mother heron, but of the whole nestful of its nearly fledged offspring? What a price to pay for the pleasure of an aigret plume! What a travesty of religion to be able to come into church decked with an aigret feather and sing in the words of the Benedicite, 'Oh, all ye fowls of the air, bless ye the Lord, praise him and magnify him forever!'"

A Mothers' Club.

An illustration of how a good work must extend itself and its influence is given by a "Round Robin" mothers' club of over 40 members in St. Paul. Their work is thorough and earnest; they read at home on lines mapped out by the Philadelphia center and hold most interesting weekly meetings. Now they have gone a step farther and are forming mothers' clubs throughout the city, and next year plan a school alliance which will bring mothers and teachers together. A more important movement than this last is not often undertaken by a club, although it is the natural result of thorough work and well directed enthusiasm.—St. Paul Correspondent.

The Latest In Hairdressing.

The latest device in hairdressing is to make use of a coil of jute or curled hair, in other days called a "rat." This coil is much the shape of a very large cruller, and it is pinned exactly in the center of the head, one's own hair being first drawn through the opening in the center of the ring. When adjusted, the hair is twisted around this ring, and gives the effect of a very large coil of hair. In case the wearer's hair is not luxuriant, the cruller shaped piece is first lightly covered with hair the exact shade of these meager tresses.—New York Post.

Cocoanut Pudding.

Mix 3 ounces of fine cake or bread crumbs with 2 ounces of butter, 2 ounces of caster sugar and 3 ounces of desiccated cocoanut, previously soaked in boiling milk. Add the yolks and whites—beaten separately—of 2 fresh eggs and half a pint of boiling milk with a pinch of salt. Pour into a buttered pie dish, place an edge of pastry round and bake in gentle oven until firmly set.

FROM BOTTOM TO TOP

EDWARD HINES, ONCE OFFICE BOY, NOW LUMBER KING.

In 1878 He Dusted the Desks—In 1896 He Owns His Old Employer's Business. A Story of Hard Work and Thrift by a Chicago Boy.

Office boy in 1878, millionaire in 1896. That is the record of Edward Hines. By a deal just carried through, involving over $500,000, Mr. Hines absorbed the business in which he began as an office boy 18 years ago. He now controls the largest lumber company in the world.

It includes planing mills, steam barges, blocks of docks and yards along the south branch of the Chicago river in the vicinity of Blue Island avenue.

All the schooling Edward Hines got was in the Chicago grammar schools. When he felt he had got a pretty fair hold on the three R's, he looked around for a job. He found one as office boy for the S. K. Martin Lumber company, one of the greatest firms in the business.

"Eddie," as they called him, kept his eyes open from the start. He made up his mind he was going to master the principle of buying what some man wants to sell and selling to the man that wants to buy. He also made it a rule to save a certain part of his pay, and he stuck to it.

He soon secured a thorough grasp of the lumber business, and his service became invaluable to the company. He was promoted successively to be clerk, bookkeeper, foreman, superintendent and finally general manager, the highest position in the gift of the company. Meanwhile he had practiced the precepts of "Poor Richard," and his savings amounted to a snug sum.

When he became manager, he tried to buy stock in the copmany. The firm's policy was against giving employees any interest, but because Hines was such a capable young man they made an exception and sold him a few shares. This was shortsighted on their part. The few shares did not make him feel as if he were a partner, and he wanted to be working for his own business.

The most surprised man in Chicago was S. K. Martin when he woke up one morning and learned that Mr. Hines had resigned and organized a rival company. Not only that, but Mr. Hines took with him several other important employees of the old company. They combined their capital, secured credit and the Edward Hines Lumber company at once launched into business.

It was a success from the beginning. The new company secured docks and yards under the shadow of the old company's plant. A keen rivalry sprang up, but on Aug. 19, 1894, the S. K. Martin company lost $500,000 by fire, and the Hines company forged ahead. The struggle continued until recently, when in consideration of a sum reported to be over $500,000 the Martin company was absorbed by the Hines company.

There is now no Martin company. It is all Hines. In 1895 the concern shipped 150,193,307 feet of lumber, which breaks all records for shipments by single firms. The office boy who attended to business is now the greatest lumber dealer in the world.—New York World.

CONCERTS BY WIRE.

Fifty Distant Cities Hear a Phonograph Performance.

A novel concert, in the nature of an experiment, was given at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., the other night. A phonograph was placed close to a telephone, the latter being connected with 50 or more cities within a radius of 400 miles.

The phonograph was then set to work. It turned out songs, recitations and band music for an hour.

The sounds were plainly transmitted to all cities on the circuit, embracing Pittsburg, Boston, Buffalo, New York and other points.

It is asserted that the sounds were more distinct as they came through the wires than when heard directly in front of the phonograph.

Montreal's Ex-Exhibition.

The mayor of Montreal has issued a card to the public in which he says that the projected British Empire exposition, a private enterprise, which was never sanctioned by the city or government, has been abandoned.

The project of holding an international exhibition in 1897 is now under consideration. Meanwhile the public is warned against making any arrangements for the Montreal international exhibition this year, which will certainly not be held.

Gold Galore.

From smelter returns for the first quarter of the year The Rocky Mountain News predicts a gold production of $30,000,000 for Colorado in 1896.

Spring Song.

When the ash tree buds, and the maples
And the osier wands are red,
And the fairy sunlight dapples
Dales where the leaves are spread,
The pools are full of spring water,
And winter's dead.

When the bloodroot blows in the tangle,
And the lithe brooks run,
And the violets gleam and spangle
The glades in the golden sun,
The showers are bright as the sunlight.
April has won.

When the color is free in the grasses,
And the martins whip the mere,
And the Maryland yellow throat passes
With his whistle quick and clear,
The willow is full of catkins.
May is here.

Then cut a reed by the river,
Make a song beneath the lime
And blow with your lips a-quiver
While your sweetheart carols the rhyme
The glamour of love, the lyric of life,
The springtime, the springtime!

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.

FRIDAY, JULY 24 ..... 1896

The adjournment of the Democratic Convention marks an epoch in our history. Grave responsibilities rested on the shoulders of the bimetallic delegates who entered that convention, and great possibilities of success or failure hung upon their action. Upon their patriotism and wisdom, their ability to discern the responsibilities that devolved upon them and subordinate party ties and prejudice to the general weal, rested not alone the future of the Democratic party, but in a large measure the salvation of our country.

The producing classes looked with hope to the Democratic Convention to give them leadership, to name the candidate who would unite all bimetallists, who would point out the road to victory and the path to the disenthralment of our industrial classes from the grievious burdens that grind them down. More than ordinary responsibilities weighed upon those bimetallists who controlled the Chicago Convention. The duty of uniting bimetallists of all parties devolved upon them. They were called upon to speak, not alone for those bimetallic Democrats who chose them as their representatives, but for bimetallists of all parties. The responsibility of marshaling the producing classes against the money cliques, of naming a candidate who would be satisfactory not to Democrats alone but to Populists and bimetallic Republicans as well, fell to their lot, and upon their ability to discern such a man and their courage to choose him rested the prospects of uniting the bimetallic forces and of success.

Great were the possibilities of success that opened before the bimetallic Democrats who controlled the Chicago Convention; even greater were the chances of mistake and failure. To nominate a man from a purely partisan standpoint was to court defeat. Confronted with a bolt of the gold Democrats, it was and is evident that, unless bimetallists of all parties could be united on the nominee of the convention, the success of such nominee at the polls would be impossible; that the silver Democrats by themselves were and are in a hopeless minority, just as are the Populists and bimetallic Republicans; and that the only hope of victory lay, as it now lies, in uniting all bimetallists. It was this task of choosing a candidate acceptable to all bimetallists that lay before the Democratic convention, and upon the ability of the delegates to that convention to fulfill it satisfactorily rested the possibility of success.

To say that the bimetallists in the Chicago Convention took full advantages of the possibilities that lay before them, to say that they took such action as will insure the union of bimetallists of all parties on the platform there adopted, and in support of the nominee there named, would be idle. It is to be regretted that those who drafted the platform did not rise above partisanship. The financial planks deploring the evils of the appreciating gold standard and pledging the party to the restoration of silver to its time honored place as full legal tender money side by side with gold, are clear cut and unequivocal as are the planks condemning the issue and sale of bonds for gold, demanding that the sovereign power over all issues of paper money shall be vested in the government and denouncing the surrender of this power to the banks, but the references to the protective system are distinctly partisan in spirit, and anything but conciliatory to those bimetallists who believe in protection, and without whose aid Democratic success is impossible.

In short the platform does not rise to the occasion. A crisis confronts our producing classes, and it cannot be met with success unless all true Americans will put patriotism before partisanship. The money cliques arrayed in defense of the appreciating gold standard that is sapping the vitality of our people, are bold, aggressive and united. They are leaving no stone unturned to saddle the appreciating gold standard on our people and their efforts will be crowned with success unless bimetallists of all parties can be brought to stand shoulder to shoulder and cast their votes for a common candidate representing the interests of our producing classes and standing for financial independence as opposed to Major McKinley and the money cliques, financial bondage and subserviency to the dictation of the creditor classes of Great Britian. For bimetallists to divide against themselves is to play into the hands of the money cliques who are striving, through the agency of an appreciating dollar, to enslave our people.

It is therefore a misfortune that a partisan spirit should pervade the platform adopted by the Democratic Convention and the convention that sought to unite all bimetallists under the Democratic banner and to marshal the forces of the producing classes against the money cliques, showed little wisdom in bringing into the platform and in a partisan spirit denunciations of the protective system to which all protectionists must take exception. We believe bimetallism and protection to be inseparable, just as we believe gold-monometallism to mean free trade, and there are thousands of bimetallists, hitherto Republicans and now protestionists who hold this belief in accord with us.

We repeat that the declarations in the Democratic platform anent the tariff are not conducive to the support of the candidate standing on that platform by protectionists. But for protectionists who see that under gold monometallism protection can be but a mere sham, who recognize the folly of building up a tariff barrier with one hand with a view to checking imports while holding to silver using peoples a bounty, in the shape of a premium on gold, which will enable them to ride over such tariff duties, who perceive the inutility of tariff duties to bring renewed prosperity to our manufacturers so long as our farming classes, their customers, are impoverished, who see that the home market must be made worth having before its preservation to our manufacturers can bring them prosperity and who see that prosperity to our agricultural classes will only come with better prices and that under the appreciating gold standard prices must continue to fall; for protectionists who see all this there is only one thing to do and that is to do what they can to restore bimetallism by giving their votes for the Hon. Wm. J. Bryan, of Nebraska.—The American.

BORN.

STERLING—At Bishop, July 18, 1896, to Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Sterling, twins—son and daughter.

Are you registered? If not, why not?

Fred Holbert came down from Alvord on Wednesday's train.

Miss Wonacott, of Bishop, is visiting friends in Independence.

Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Corklin were down from Aberdeen on Wednesday.

Mrs. T. Webb and Mrs. P. H. Mack returned from Onion valley yesterday.

Mrs. J. R. Moffett left Wednesday afternoon on a visit to friends in Lone Pine.

Bert Rhine returned on Thursday morning from a short business trip to San Francisco.

Walter Ober, of Big Pine, who has been dangerously ill for some time past, is slowly convalescing.

Miss Emma Chalfant, of Bishop, is visiting her friend Miss Lena Thomsen, of Fort Independence.

Mrs. M. E. T. Stevens came down from Bishop on Wednesday, and is visiting friends in this locality.

It is reported that Mr. Joseph Shelly, of Bishop, and Mrs. Emma O'Neal, of Napa, formerly of Bishop, were united in marriage at Napa City, July 15, 1896.

J. Sub Johnson, Tax-Collector of Tulare county, A. M. Squires, a newspaper man, and J. A. Stewart passed through Independence Tuesday on their way to Mt. Whitney.

It commenced raining here Wednesday morning, with showers throughout the day and evening. Enough rain fell to settle the dust and brighten things up generally.

Miss Edna Shepherd, of Los Angeles, arrived on Saturday last on a visit to relatives in this section. At present she is the guest of Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Gunn, of Independence.

Miss Isabella Watterson, who had been visiting with friends in Independence and vicinity for a few days during the past week, returned to her home at Bishop on Tuesday last.

J. S. McQueen, D. D. S., came down from Bishop last Friday and has rooms in the Norman House. He will remain but a short time longer, and those having work in his line should call on him as soon as possible.

A garden in town yields potato vines which measure fifty-two inches in hight, with potatoes about the size of beans. The owner calls them McKinley spuds—the vines afford high protection and no nutriment at the bottom.

When I have lots of gold in my possession, said a Pomona man the other day, I am a gold bug; when I have lots of silver, I am a silver man; when I have a stack of paper money, I am a paper man, but when I haven't a darned cent, I am a Populist.

Away up on Symmes' Creek, the other day, a gentleman found a long, funnel-shaped fishnet, set to entrap trout. He promptly burned the contrivance and would have liked to incinerate the makers thereof as well. A local organization, devoted to the energetic protection of game of all kinds, is badly needed.

A petition asking for the re establishment of the Western Union Telegraph office at Rhine's store is being circulated, and generally signed by our people. The petition will be forwarded to Supt. Jaynes forthwith, and we may confidently expect to again have direct telegraphic communication with the outside world in the very near future.

Newsy Items from the Lake Side Resorts.

Rain commenced to fall in Keeler Wednesday morning at about 7 o'clock and it rained hard all day. About half an inch fell, which laid the dust and made every thing look fresh and spring like again.

Miss Edna Matlack, of Independence, is visiting with Mrs. J. J. Morton of Keeler for a while.

There was a fire at the pumping station about five miles from Cerro Gordo some time Tuesday and the pump house and three water tanks were burned. This fire will probably cause the temporary shutting down of the Cerro Gordo mines for at least thirty days or more, until the water tanks can be rebuilt, as the water supply at Cerro Gordo is now short. Mr. W. J. Jenkins, the foreman for Mr. Boland, brought the news down and informed Mr. Boland by telegraphing to San Francisco.

Robt. Lockett has gone to work for P. Clinton at Cerro Gordo.

Jeff Riggs and family have moved from Keeler to Lone Pine and will remain at Boland's ranch for a few months.

Mrs. Aaron Reynolds went to Georges Creek Tuesday afternoon for a few months visit with relatives and friends during the hot weather.

John Knupple, of Cerro Gordo, shipped about seventeen tons of silver ore from his mine to Selby & Co., about ten days ago.

Mining matters are quieter than ever in this section as there seems to be no work being done to speak of and no ore for shipment.

Frank Fitzgerald went out to his mine at Modock Tuesday and took some miners with him. He will soon be shipping ore again.

Mrs. F. Fitzgerald returned to Lone Pine Tuesday to visit relatives there.

R. Penaluna has gone to Modock to work for Mr. Fitzgerald.

R. C. Long, who formerly worked in Keeler and also drove stage for Miller, is at present foreman of a mine in Randsburg district and writes that the camp is a good one and lively one too.

Arthur Noyes is working at Shepherd's hotel for awhile as he is tired of lead mining.

Sam Thomas has turned out his eight or ten animals on pasture at Georges Creek till the ore hauling picks up a little.

Yours, hastily,
BRYAN.

Of Interest to Miners.

The United States Supreme Court has made a decision in the case of Haws vs. Victoria Copper Mining Co., reversing all the precedents of older decisions and the customary practice of miners in locating mining claims. It has held that a valid mining location may be made without marking the boundaries on the ground or even of posting a notice on the ground located. The practical effect of this adds additional uncertainty to the mining titles based on location only. Under it old locations supposed to be invalid by reason of not being marked on the ground can be revived, to the injury of locators who have in good faith definitely marked their claims. Despite the decision, it is preferable that locators should carefully mark their claims out on the ground so that they can be readily traced and identified as the boundaries of a mining location. Also, the notice should preferably be posted on the ground and maintained there. This course will certainly be a protection against any subsequent locator, though, under the decision referred to, it would not avail against a prior locator who did not mark his claim boundaries or post any notice on the claim. Another point on which the decision bears is the location of two or more claims on the same lode by the same locator. This is inferentially validated. Also, two or more adjoining placer locations may be made by the same locator—in fact, there is no limit to the amount of territory one locator can tie up without incurring any expense except the minor one of recording, from January 1st of one year to the 31st of December of the following year. Is Senator Stewart going to live forever?

Register.

Have you registered? Only two more weeks remain in which to complete the roll and over 500 voters must get registered within that time if a full vote is to be had this year. Every citizen should understand that he cannot vote if his name is not on the Great Register, and he cannot register this year, and be entitled to vote, unless he does so on or before Saturday, August 8th. It matters not whether an elector moves next week or not. He should register right away. With his name on the roll he is all right, he can get a transfer from one precinct to another (within the county) upon making affidavit, up to within twenty-seven days before the election. But after Aug. 8th the books will close and there will be no way for him to have a voice in the election of public officers if he has neglected to place it there. Less than 625 names have so far been received for enrollment by Mr. Hession, our County Clerk, and it is feared that quite a number of Inyo's voters will be disfranchised if they do not make haste in consulting the Clerk or his deputies. Mr. Hession appointed deputies throughout the county so as to make it convenient as possible for voters. If any of them get left, they have only themselves to blame as every means for their accommodation had been provided.

The following is the law in regard to transfers for voters: "Any elector who has registered and thereafter moved his residence to another precinct in the same county, thirty days before an election, may have his registration transferred to such other precinct upon his application verified by oath setting forth the change of residence and containing the other facts required for original registration."

Next week we will let our readers know what the people have done and what they intend doing for this year's Fair.

Letter From South Africa.

MAFEKING, S. AFRICA,
May 20, 1896.

SIR:—Perhaps it would interest some of your readers in the mining camps of the Inyos and of Goler to hear of the fate of a couple of their brethren here on the Dark Continent. The men to whom I refer are Palmer and Johnson, who were among the very first killed by the Matabeli in the present war. Palmer had been a mining engineer and Johnson I had formerly known as a railroad man at San Bernardino. Both had been mining last year in Arizona.

About the beginning of January they started from Los Angeles on their long "trek" of fourteen thousand miles. Almost from the start ill-luck attended them and pursued them with strange persistency. While coming up the "solent" to Southhampton the German steamer "Spree," on which they were, ran ashore on the Isle of Wight and remained there five days. Next they sailed from Southhampton, on the twenty-first of December, on the crack Union liner the "Scot." Happening to be a passenger on this boat myself I immediately recognized Johnson, and we had some long "yarning" about the old Coast and old times.

However, bad times were in store for us just now and the next four days we had an experience of a storm in the Bay of Biscay, that nobody on board would be anxious to repeat. On Christmas day, in the midst of storm, thunder and lightning, we half steamed, half drifted into Vigo Bay, with the twin screws of the "Scot" in an unworkable condition. Hardly had the ship her anchor down when the body of a young lady, who had died during the storm, was sent ashore to be buried in the vine clad hills of Spain.

After a week at Vigo I managed to get away on the first steamer that called in. There were not enough vacant berths for all and lots were drawn to decide who were to go. Here I said adios to both the Californians, neither of whom I was to see again.

Two months later, here in Mafeking, I heard the news of the first massacre in Matabeleland and that Palmer and Johnson were among the victims. The Inspector of mounted police here tells me that when Palmer was starting on the stage coach for Buluwayo he remarked: "Well, I've got so far with two shipwrecks and I guess I don't want another on this trip."

Just six weeks later he and his "pard" were lying dead and mutilated on the banks of the Lowe Gwelo—assagaied by their own Matabele boys.

Yours, &c., &c.
GEORGE H. BAILEY.

From Aberdeen.

Mrs. J. W. Calloway and little daughter, who have been visiting friends in Oregon for the last two months, returned to Aberdeen on Monday's train.

Mr. A. A. Neil has received a consignment of bacon from the East. Producers and consumers are making a great mistake, or this would not be. There is no reason why all the bacon consumed in Owen's valley should not be produced here, and the money paid out for eastern bacon and on freight, kept at home and expended in home improvements.

Mrs. May Jones returned from Bishop last Friday.

AURORA.

To the People of Inyo County.

YIELDING TO THE IMPORTUNITIES OF my hosts of Inyo County friends expressed in petitions, letters and personally, I hereby offer myself as a candidate for the office of Judge of the Superior Court of Inyo County, at the approaching election in November.

The office being a non-partisan one, and as those who have so cordially invited me to seek the office represent all political parties, it would be pleasing to me to be the candidate of the people irrespective of party.

Respectfully,
N. D. ARNOT.

A Great Claimant Destitute.

Mrs. J. H. Peralta-Reavis, the claimant to a fortune of $300,000,000, is lying sick unto death at Denver after a serious fight with inflammatory rheumatism that prostrated her for six weeks. She is absolutely without resources, and is taking in washing for a living. Even at this her existence is precarious, owing to the failure of health. Until recently she lived at the Gilpin, a fashionable flat, but had to leave on account of her funds running low on account of the failure of remittances to arrive from her brother in Kentucky.

For the Whist Championship.

At a meeting of the American Whist league held a few days ago it was decided to hold the annual tournament at the Oriental hotel, Manhattan Beach, N. Y., June 22 to 27 inclusive. The league is made up of several state associations, and its membership includes nearly 400 clubs. Each club is allowed to enter a team of four men, and the winners will receive a silver trophy valued at $500, the same to be emblematic of the whist championship of this country.

RESPONSIVE BOTH TO HARSH AND SWEET SOUNDS.

The nerves are often painfully acute. When this is the case, the best thing to be done is to seek the tonic and tranquillizing assistance of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, a superb nervine. No less beneficial is it for dyspeptic, bilious, malarial, rheumatic, bowel and kidney complaints. Use with persistent regularity. A wineglassful before retiring confers sleep.

"Is Jackson Parke a careful man?" "Is he? Well, I should say so. Do you know he won't carry home a sausage from the butcher shop without first getting it tagged.

Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness, without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, then laxatives or other remedies are not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, then one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction.

ALL PARIS IS EXCITED

A YOUNG WOMAN WARNS HUMANITY OF COMING DISASTERS.

She Claims to Be an Intermediary of the Angel Gabriel—No One Doubts She Is Sincere—Religious Circles Excited Over the Matter.

An enormous sensation is being caused in Paris by the seances given by a young woman of 25, named Henriette Condon, in the Rue de Parades. She claims to be a direct intermediary of the Archangel Gabriel, who has been specially selected to warn humanity of coming disasters to Europe.

The girl asserts that a vision of the archangel appeared to her in August last as she was sitting quietly on a sofa at home, and since then she has been under the influence of the archangel. It was only recently, however, that she gained full knowledge of the power that was being exercised over her.

This strange case has become public, and now fashionable Paris jostles on the staircase and in the anteroom in order to obtain the ten minutes' conversation which the girl accords to each person who is furnished with a letter of introduction.

There is no question that her motives are above suspicion, her parents being eminently respectable. No money or gifts of any sort are asked for or accepted. The utmost that can be said in her disfavor is that she is probably a neurotic.

While Zola, mindful of Lourdes, hesitates to compare with Bernadette Soubirons, Dr. Guinon of L'Ecole de la Salpetriere declares she is either mad or in a state of somnambulism, probably the latter.

Meantime the visionary exercises a powerful influence on all consulting her, as people do in hundreds from 10 o'clock in the morning till 10 o'clock at night.

Women are particularly impressed, and extraordinary scenes of emotion take place as the visitors leave the house.

People above suspicion affirm that the young woman knows their life secrets, which they have scarcely breathed to a living soul, but her prophecies respecting future troubles in Europe are somewhat vague.

The woman repeats in much the same words to each person a sort of singsong version of the coming holocaust that is to fall on France and England.

It is impossible to look into her large, piercing blue eyes and not feel that she is speaking with the utmost sincerity.

Whatever her condition may be, there is a great deal of diversity of opinion in Paris respecting it.

The journals publish column reports about her, and a controversy rages in religious circles. The archbishop of Paris is unable to decide what to do.

Some persons assert she is possessed of a demon, others that she is an earthly saint. Those around her believe implicitly in her declarations.

It is impossible to predict the outcome of the affair.—Paris Cor. New York Journal.

HE PHOTOGRAPHS COLORS.

The Process Perfected by a Citizen of Chicago.

James W. McDonough of Chicago has perfected a process by which natural colors are photographed.

The evidences are actual photographs of landscapes, men, women and paintings, taken with an ordinary camera, developed and printed by every day processes, but differing from ordinary photographs in that the colors as well as the lines, lights and shades are present.

The principal additions to the present outfits are a specially ruled screen, which is placed directly before the sensitive plate in the camera, and a specially ruled paper on which the colored photograph is printed. The dry or wet plates must be made orthochromatic—that is, free from the usual photographic fault of exaggerating the depths of green, yellow and red and the brightness of blue and violet.—New York World.

For Easy Writing on Trains.

The rolling stock of German state railroads has been provided with an appliance which will enable passengers on board a train to write without difficulty and regardless of the motion of the train. The new appliance consists of a board suspended from the ceiling of the car by strong but elastic cords, which will prevent the vibration of the moving train from interfering with the writer. At the present time only the first class compartments of through trains are furnished with this appliance, and a small charge is made by the conductor for its use.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Ingersoll's Gift to Peoria.

Colonel Robert E. Ingersoll intends to present the city of Peoria, Ills., with a wholesome drinking fountain, and the same will be erected during the coming summer. It will be very handsome in design and placed in position upon the courthouse square. Colonel Ingersoll commenced his professional career in Peoria and left the city about 20 years ago.

Million Acres Open to Settlers.

The president has issued a proclamation opening the Red Lake Indian reservation in Minnesota to settlement. The date selected is May 1. The White Earth reservation will be opened by a proclamation to be issued later, though it was originally planned to issue the proclamations simultaneously. The two comprise about 1,000,000 acres and form a portion of the old Chippewa lands.

Lone Star Optimism.

Well, the sun is out again, and the peach blossoms are yet able to blush a little when he kisses them. So, until it is definitely known that the cold weather has played the mischief with the fruit crop, we will risk a faint but hopeful "Grand old Texas."—Galveston News.

STORIES OF THE DAY.

A Great Rabbit Drive Recently Held Near Fresno, Cal.

The great rabbit drive which was so elaborately planned was carried into successful execution near Fresno recently, with the result that thousands of rabbits met their fate from the merciless clubs of farmers and townspeople. Estimates as to the number killed vary, ranging from 10,000 to 25,000. It was impossible to count them, and the best estimate is no better than a guess. But the slaughter surpassed anything of the kind ever seen there before.

Ten thousand people took part—footmen, horsemen, wheelmen and vehicles of all sorts. When the line was formed ready for advance, it was in a huge crescent, one horn near McMullan station and the other near Caruthers, on the west side of the railroad. The line of people was 24 miles long. It was after 10 o'clock when W. F. Rowell signaled a general advance, and the line moved forward across orchards, fields, vineyards, and finally emerged on the open plains. The best of order was maintained. The marshals galloped along the line giving instructions. Toward noon the north and south wings began to fold inward to the center, and when within three miles of the corral the line of men had contracted till it was less than three miles long.

All this time the rabbits had been driven forward, constantly increasing in numbers. At first they had not shown much concern, but when they began to be crowded they grew excited. Several coyotes were started. Some were shot and others died later. Some whelps were caught alive. Many rattlesnakes were killed. When the rabbits had been driven into a comparatively small space, they covered the ground and soon grew excited and tried to escape by rushing through the lines. Then the slaughter began. A solid line of men dropped on their knees and clubbed the rabbits.

From this point to the corral men advanced on their knees, leaving the ground heaped with the dead behind them. Fully 10,000 were thus killed, and the others were forced into the corral, where they rushed to and fro, frantic with fear. They trampled and smothered one another to death by thousands. A coyote that entered the corral was actually trampled to death by the rabbits. Fifteen minutes with clubs finished the work.

Many good judges place the total killed at 30,000. Farmers hauled wagon loads away to feed hogs. The best of order prevailed. Only one person refused to obey orders. He was beaten and driven off the grounds by the crowd. The drive was the best managed, the largest and most satisfactory ever held in the county.—San Francisco Chronicle.

How Speaker Reed Counted a Quorum.

It is not known to 5 out of 100 statesmen in congress how Speaker Reed came to count a quorum in the Fifty-first congress. It is known to still less that the only man in the speaker's confidence on the subject was Joe Cannon, chairman of the committee on appropriations in the present congress.

Mr. Reed conceived his purpose to count a quorum as the only alternative of maintaining his authority in the house and the position of the Republicans at a very early stage of the session. His only confidant was Cannon. He and the speaker were closeted on the proposition for several days. Everything was considered and every chance was carefully weighed. Reed knew that he was taking a desperate responsibility, and that nothing was sure as to what the position of the Republicans would be. The fact that without consulting his party associates he determined upon his first conceived purpose is an illustration of his fearlessness. Cannon, after a long session, approved the programme and promised to stand by the speaker, but kept his counsel. It was to be a surprise alike to the Republicans and the Democrats. There was to be no council of war of the leaders, with prospects of friction and division, but a coup d'etat pure and simple. If it succeeded, it would prove a great thing in parliamentary history; if it failed, everything was lost. In short, the plan was to risk everything on the hazard of a die.

What occurred when the speaker counted a quorum in the contested election case then pending is known to every reader. The Republicans were panic stricken. They thought Reed had gone daft. In the supreme moment of the uproar and confusion which ensued Representative Anderson of Kansas, a Republican member, rushed up to the speaker's desk and in the greatest excitement said:

"Reed, what in heaven's name are you doing?"

Reed smiled coldly and told him he was counting those as present who refused to vote. Anderson was dumfounded for a moment. Then he said:

"It's the riskiest piece of business I ever saw; but, if you have made up your mind to do it, by the gods I'll stand by you!"

In discussing the matter with a friend afterward the speaker said that the words of Anderson convinced him that the Republicans would support him in his position. He was right. There was a quick rally among his party associates, and in a short time the political lines were tautly drawn on the question of sustaining the speaker, and he won.—Washington Post.

His Heart Hums.

Edward Lewis, who says he is a Polish Hebrew and a Russian ex-convict, arrived in Wabash, Ind., recently. Lewis is is afflicted with hypertrophy of the heart. He was examined by Dr. Lorin Smith, who says that his heart is twice its normal size, and instead of the regular beat, as in a healthy cardiac organ, there is a singing systaltic murmur.

When Lewis' chest is bared, the movement of the heart can be distinctly seen. He has been in this condition for about two years. The disease is the result of exposure while being driven from Poland to Siberia with a number of others like a drove of cattle.—Cincinnati Commercial Gazette.

Miss Gould Buys a Rare Palm.

Miss Helen M. Gould has recently added to her magnificent collection of rare palms a species of that plant called the Ravenala madagarvien. This palm is a little over 32 feet in height and nearly three times as many years old. The price paid for it, rumor says, was about $35,000.

Disappointing His Readers.

Last week the long suffering public heralded with joy our retirement from the journalistic field, but alas! their exuberance was short lived.—Vermillion Freeman.

SIR FREDERICK CARRINGTON.

New Commander of British Forces in Matabeleland.

Sir Frederick Carrington, the newly appointed commander of the British forces in Matabeleland, is well known in South Africa for his various services to the British government during the past twenty years. In 1877 he formed a troop which was called "Carrington's horse," and which still bears his name. This troop is now in South Africa. Carrington himself has been absent from that country for the past few years. Of late he has been doing duty as commander of the infantry brigade at Gibraltar. Sir Frederick is the son of a country gentleman. He was born in Gloucestershire in 1844 and entered the army at the age of 20. His first regiment was the South Wales Borderers, and he became the instructor of musketry to the regiment. In 1875 he crossed over to South Africa and organized a corps of mounted infantry for the diamond fields. He saw some active service in the Kaffir war of 1877 in the Transkei region, and again in the Sekukuni campaign in the Transvaal in 1879. He was a member of Sir Charles Warren's Bechuanaland expedition in 1884 and 1885. In the former year he was made colonel, and given rank of major general in 1893. He was made military adviser to the Governor of Cape Colony, but was recalled to Europe.

SIR FREDERICK CARRINGTON.

"Manda"—a Mule.

The author of "How Marcus Ward Saved Oregon" tells a pretty story of a vicious mule that "suffered a change of heart." 'Manda, as the mule was named, was the off-leader in a team of six animals, and was as beautiful as a picture. She would pull and stand, and hold the wagon, as obediently as possible, but by nature she was wild and vicious, and an inveterate kicker. She allowed herself to be shod, seeming to understand that this was a necessity, but except on such occasions no one ventured within range of her heels save at his peril. One night, during a stampede, 'Manda was struck by a flying picket pin, and received a deep cut in the hind leg.

The wound was so severe, and the flies became so annoying, that we decided to leave the suffering animal behind. The leg swelled, and she did not attempt to put the foot to the ground.

It was my duty that morning to bring on the loose stock, and see that nothing of value was overlooked in camp. I was ready to start, when I went up to the mule that had come with us all the long journey of three thousand miles, and had been a faithful servant. I began petting her and expressing my regret that we must leave her for the Indians and the wolves.

Never before had the famous six-mule team gone out without 'Manda prancing off as leader. She rubbed me with her nose and laid it on my shoulder, and seemed to beg as eloquently as a dumb beast could, "Don't leave me behind," and with it all there was a kindly look in her eye that I had never seen there before.

I stood stroking her head for some time, then I patted her neck and walked a little back, but constantly on guard. It was then that the mule turned and looked at me, and at the same time held up the wounded leg.

Cautiously then I ventured to take hold of the wounded leg. I rubbed it and fondled it without her showing any symptoms of resentment. I got out instruments, sewed the wound up, sewed bandages tightly about the leg, made a capital dressing, and we started, leading 'Manda. She soon began to bear her weight upon the wounded limb, and had no difficulty in keeping up with the train.

When the bandages became misplaced any one of us could stop in the road and without assistance readjust them, the mule standing patiently the while. She finished the journey with us, and no handsomer animal ever journeyed across the plains. She was never known to kick afterward, and 'Manda's "change of heart" became a stock expression.

MISS GARRETT'S HEALTH.

Rumors as to Her Condition Flatly Contradicted.

Miss Mary Garrett, who, until recently, was considered the richest woman in America, and who, notwithstanding her losses incident to the receivership of the Baltimore & Ohio railroad, still possesses a vast fortune, has left Baltimore for a visit to Bryn Mawr college, near Philadelphia. A letter from her states that she is confined to her bed with tonsilitis.

Miss Garrett closed her magnificent town house, corner of Cathedral and Monument streets, Baltimore, some months ago, and since then, with half a dozen male and female attendants, has been living at the Mount Vernon hotel, two doors above her residence. She left there, taking a number of trunks, leaving no word as to where she was going or where she could be found. On the night of the crisis in Baltimore and Ohio affairs, when the thunderbolt of failure was announced, rumors spread throughout the city to the effect that Miss Garrett had succumbed, and that her health was impaired. The reports were false, as she was then snugly ensconced at the Mount Vernon hotel.—Philadelphia Press.

Captain Benson's Statement.

A REMARKABLE AND INTERESTING CAREER.

A Member of the First Kentucky Battery Who Was in Twenty-Seven Hard-Fought Battles and Taken Prisoner at Andersonville.

From the Capital Journal, Salem Oregon.

Salem, Oregon, can boast of no better known private citizen than Captain William Benson. To the old residents, as well as to the school children, his figure is as familiar as that of Mt. Hood or the State capitol.

Captain Benson, of the First Kentucky Battery, detached from the 112th Illinois Infantry, is now seventy-four years old, and has taken part in twenty-seven hard-fought battles, besides a great many interesting skirmishes. He is pensioned for injury in the breast, from concussion of a shell, and for a wound in the right shoulder, caused by leaping from a car while being taken as a prisoner from Andersonville to Pine Forest. For the past twenty years he has suffered almost continually from malaria and shortness of breath, and has been afflicted with rheumatism in the legs and shoulders to such an extent that he had not seen a well day in all that time. He was also afflicted with constipation and piles. Eighteen years ago Mr. Benson removed from Illinois to Oregon, on account of his failing health, and since the close of the war has not been able to support himself by manual labor and has had almost constant medical attendance by physicians of practice. To see him now, tipping the scales at 210 pounds, enjoying regular health, his cheeks mantled with a fresh, rosy complexion, walking off proud and erect, with a fresh, firm, vigorous step for a man in his seventy-fourth year, is enough to make one believe in the possibility of Ponce de Leon's fabled Fountain of Youth.

Captain Benson is not only a hero of the Civil War, but a man worth considerable property. He says he would part willingly with his interest in all his earthly possessions rather than be placed back in the debilitated condition where he lingered for a score of years.

"I suppose," said he, laughing, "that what you are after is an advertisement for Pink Pills, but I want to say that I am very glad to give you this testimonial, as I am convinced it will relieve a great deal of suffering, if it can become widely known. I am firmly convinced, after an experience of over fifty years with both patent medicines and physicians, that if every family could keep those Pink Pills in the house they would never need a doctor. "I have paid out over $1,000 for doctoring with the best physicians at Salem, but not a cent for myself since a year and a half ago. It was then that I first heard of Pink Pills. I got the first box at a drug store, and had not much confidence in them when I began to take them. I took one box before I got much benefit, but by the middle of the second box the pain in my breast began to disappear, and the rheumatism in my shoulder went away. The shortness of breath was alleviated, and I began to sleep like an infant. For the first time in twenty years I realized the luxury of sound sleep, and my system began to recuperate.

"By the end of the third box it had taken away all my rheumatism and stiffness in the muscles and joints, and I began to feel as nimble as a boy, and could do as good a day's work as ever, but for my wounds. I enjoy the best health I ever enjoyed in my life. My natural weight increased from ten to twenty pounds. My flesh is solid and my skin is as clean and fresh as a baby's. I had tried every remedy under the sun for piles, but without relief. At times they were near killing me. Sciatic rheumatism had laid me up in bed for months at a time. Pink Pills have cured all these things and I have not felt an indication of piles or rheumatism for eight months. People who see me now cannot believe that I am the same man. My face looked drawn, my eyes were bloodshot, my skin was scurvied, and I could not have had a worse appearance if I had undergone starvation on an arctic expedition. I can now eat whatever I have a relish for, and all I want of it, and it don't hurt me.

"I used to be constipated continually, and I have taken wheelbarrow loads of other pills, but never got perfect relief until I tried Pink Pills. I am now taking two pills a week, and sometimes I go without them for a month, and, as I said, I enjoy continuous good health. I have got rid of rheumatism and everything else. Pink Pills perform wonders. They go to work and fix up the kidneys and back and the whole system. Three days after first taking them you feel the effect all over. The worst trouble with me was, I had got so I could not remember anything. My mind was clouded. A month after I began taking Pink Pills I first began to notice my mind become clear and active, and my memory is perfectly restored, a happy change from the feeling of stupidity I had suffered. This medicine has fixed me up and made a new man of me. It is only the other day that Dr. Reynolds, Dean of the Salem Medical College, remarked to me that I was looking hale and hearty. I said Yes, and no thanks to the doctors. It is Pink Pills that have done it. He pooh-hooed at it. But I know what I am talking about, and he had to admit what I said." (Signed) Wm. Benson.

THE FAMILY STORY

DADDY JOHN'S NEW CLOTHES

THERE had been a royal fire in Daddy John's cabin, and there was still a great bed of glowing coals when his daughter Liz called him to dinner. Daddy warmed his thin, blue hands at the fire and the sweet smell of the corn pone and the fragrance of the coffee were very pleasant to him. His old, wizened face wrinkled into something meant for a smile.

"The doctor woman's bar'l hes come!" he said.

"I seen it on Jule Fraley's wagon," replied Liz, her dark, weather-beaten face lighting.

"Come an' eat dinner, dad," she added.

"I'm a-comin'," quavered the old man, tottering forward and pulling along an old splint chair.

"Whar's thet piece er saddle blanket?" he croaked.

"I hed it er ridin' Pomp," declared Bud.

"You git it mighty quick," said his mother.

Bud brought a tattered sheepskin which the old man carefully folded in the chair and then sat down.

That part of Daddy John's apparel which came in contact with the sheepskin was so attenuated as to fabric that the interposition of the worn fleece was most comforting.

"I've got ter hev some new cloes, Liz," said Daddy, presently.

She looked at Bud.

"Bud wants some new clo'es powerful bad, too, but he eats sech a heap, 'pears like I cayn't never git him noan."

"Bud kin git erlong," said the old man, testily.

"Don't you reckon the doctor woman's got clo'es in her bar'l?" asked Liz.

"I reckon. But mebby ther ain't nary thing fer me."

"Ef you should go up thar——"

"I ain't er goin'," interrupted the old man, almost angrily. "Doctor woman's al'ays been good ter we uns an' I don't aim ter ax her fer ary thing."

His feeble hands trembled as he took up his torn hat.

"She got plenty of everything," said Liz, sullenly.

"It don't differ. I ain't goin'!"

Daddy John went out.

"Dad al'ays wus er fool!" mused Liz, as she lit her pipe.

"You go an' help yer grandad pick up taters," she called to Bud.

Bud, sauntering lazily toward the potato bank, saw somebody swinging along the mountain toward the cabin.

"Thar's the doctor woman's nigger er comin' atter you, grandad," he called.

Daddy John set his spade down hard and leaned forward on the handle.

"Comin' atter me? You'se a plum idjit, Bud."

But he stared from under his shaggy brows and breathed hard as the handsome yellow woman came up.

"Howdy, Sally!"

"Howdy, Daddy John. Bankin' up yer taters?"

"I reckon."

He was shaking all over and felt sick.

"Got some permaters yit, daddy? Gi' me some! I want a permater pie, I does."

"Yis, yis," said the old man, shortly.

"Doctor wants you to come up thar, daddy. She's got sumfin fer you'se outen her bar'l."

"Yessum. I'll come atter I gits my taters done banked up."

Sally started off with her tomatoes.

"Tell her I'm obleeged to her," called daddy's cracked voice.

"What my missis wants to throw away good clo'es on that pore white trash fer, I don't know," grumbled Sally. "Me and Jake could er make use o' all o' them things."

Daddy John went on with his work.

"Ain't yer er goin', grandad?" cried Bud.

"Yis, I'm er goin' right now."

He toddled off to the cabin, washed his hands at the porch and dried them on a bit of burlaps. The doctor was watching for the old man. He gave a queer pull at his tattered hat brim as he came near.

"Howdy, Daddy John! I'm right glad to see you. Come in!"

He stood at the edge of the hearth, gazing at the barrel. The doctor smiled.

"Your hat is getting pretty old, daddy. The brim is torn and there's such a big hole in the crown!"

"Yessum. Hit's plum worn out, sure 'nuff."

"Never mind," said the doctor. "I have such a nice cap for you," showing it to him. "Made of soft fur and with ear lappets to tie down."

The old face altered. It lost ten weary years.

"Try it on, daddy! Now, is it not nice? You won't freeze your poor ears this winter."

"No, ma'am! Thank'ee, ma'am. I reckon I'd better go now."

"Wait a bit. You need some shoes, daddy. Here are some—good ones."

"Mighty fine shoes, mighty fine," mumbled the old man.

"Now, you need some soft warm socks. Here they are. You want to put them on, don't you? Come in here. And now I must go—go—oh, yes—go to feed my chickens. But there's one thing more. Here is a nice pair of trousers!"

"Doctor!"

"It's all right, Daddy! They will not fit you, I'm sure."

small spindle legs rattling around in the fine black trousers, his ragged, faded calico shirt abashed in such company. He looked at her speechless, his wrinkled face working.

She smiled at him.

"I have a vest here for you, Daddy, and I'll give you a clean white shirt to take home."

"Doctor!" the old man gasped. "I cayn't——"

"Don't worry, Daddy. Try on the vest."

He put it on, tugging weakly at the buttons.

"Jest what I needed," he muttered, huskily.

"You look very nice, Daddy. There's only one thing more, and here it is—the finest, warmest coat in Buncombe County."

She held it up by the shoulders and drew it on.

"Now, is not that a lovely coat?"

He stroked the soft cloth gently, pulling at the fronts with his stubby fingers.

"It's lined with silk," said the doctor. "Daddy, I shouldn't know you."

He looked down at himself in a dazed way. Then he started.

"I'd better go home now," he said, hurriedly. "I never had nary suit o' clo'es afore. God bless ye, doctor."

He caught her hand.

"I'm so glad to give them to you, Daddy," she said softly, with tears.

The next day Jule Fraley came up to mend the roof and while he warmed himself at the fire he told the story of Daddy's return home.

"We wuz a pullin' corn, me an' Liz an' Bud, an' I see the old man er comin' down the hill, an' I says: 'Look yon, Liz! Is thet yer dad?'

"'Naw!' says Liz. 'Thet ain't dad. Looks like ole Preacher Freeman.'

"Sure nuff—he did look plut blank like ole Preacher Freeman. An' we watched 'im tell he crossed the branch, an' when he clim' up the bank he staggered a bit—yer know daddy's mighty onstiddy on his legs—an' I knowed who hit was, an' I said:

"'Tis yer daddy, Liz.' An' Liz were plum outdone 'at she didn't know her own daddy," concluded Jule, indulging in one of those silent laughs peculiar to his kind. He went up on the roof presently and the doctor came out to overlook the work, always charmed into lingering by the wonderful beauty of the landscape. The house sat upon one of the foothills of the great Appalachian range, east of the French Broad. Looking west one saw a wooded, undulating country, rolling away to the valley and there stayed by the massive wall of a great mountain that rose far into the blue. Along the mountain side the railroad made its way over high trestles and red clay embankments, and at times one caught the sound of the whistle, the rumble of wheels and saw the train rush along, small in the distance like a child's toy. All at once there was a shout and at the same instant a shot rang out.

"Thar's a convict got off," cried Jule, when the doctor appeared. "I saw him jump off the train."

The doctor shivered.

"And they didn't stop?"

"Why, no, but the guard fired on him. They'll send a party back when they gits to Biltmore, an' offer $100 reward fer him, likely. Don't I wish I c'd git it."

"Will he get caught, do you think?"

"I reckon. They gin'ally does. He's tuk ter the woods now. They al'ays does when they makes a break. But he'll git an outing, anyhow. Dog-goned ef I blame 'im."

"Mr. Farley, where do they go when they escape like that?"

"They lays in the woods. Mebby they know niggers that'll feed 'em and give 'em clo'es. They're al'ays in a mighty hurry to git shet o' their striped suit, an' ef they do sometimes they git away fer good."

Daddy John came once to visit the doctor, wearing his new clothes, and then he paid visits to all his kinsfolks and old neighbors, and the queer, pathetic figure in the fine black suit, weakly climbing over the hills, became a familiar sight.

Then one night a terrible calamity befell, and the next morning it was known all over the settlement that "Daddy John's new clo'es 'at come in the doctor woman's bar'l had been stole."

Horsemen riding to town drew rein and discussed the theft for hours. Every other woman put on her sunbonnet and called on her next neighbor, and then the two went together to see Daddy John. So it happened that when the doctor arrived she found the house so full that two of the women rose and sat on the floor to offer her a chair. There was a curious stillness in the house. One of the women whispered:

"Hit's just like a buryin', only thar ain't no corpse."

Daddy John was sitting by the fire, huddled together, the picture of misery.

"I've lost my new clo'es," he quavered.

"I'm so sorry, Daddy John," said the doctor, taking his hard, bony hand.

"I never had no new clo'es afore," he croaked, piteously.

A few frosty tears dropped on his grizzled cheek. Liz took up a corner of [illegible] eyes. All the

"They wuz sech fine clo'es!" mused the old man. "The coat hed a silk linin'. Doctor said it war silk. An' the purtiest buttons!"

"An' them clo'es could a' ben fixed up fer Bud when dad got done with 'em," said Liz.

The old man paled with sudden passion.

"I ain't er goin' ter git done with 'em!" he said, in a high voice. "Bud shan't hev 'em. Doctor woman give 'em ter me. I never hed no new clo'es afore. But I ain't got 'em now. They're stole."

He broke down into tearless sobs, that shook the old chair.

"Don't cry, Daddy!" all the women called in unison, and they shed a few perfunctory tears and passed the snuff-box around.

"You don't use terbacco in any form, do yer, doctor?" asked one.

The doctor admitted that she did not, and they looked steadily at her, trying to realize the phenomenon. Weeks passed and Daddy still crooned over the fire in utter dejection. Old age, poverty and loneliness, unhappy trio, were his sole companions. It was now believed that the clothes would never be recovered.

Out in the woods one frosty morning a heavy foot crushed into the dead leaves, and a big chestnut, falling, struck the owner of the foot on the nose.

He raised his black face toward the treetops.

"Hi! Dey's drappin' all de time now, an' deys a heap better'n co'n."

He sat down in his tracks and filled his pockets and shirt-front, eating voraciously the while.

"Reckon I'd better be gwine now," he said presently.

Rising, he picked his way, like a cat, through the underbrush, climbing constantly till he reached a spot where a huge bowlder cropped out and overhung the mountain side. Its crest commanded the whole valley, and its shelving underside made a cozy shelter. Thick pines crowded up and concealed the entrance. The convict had been so sharply hunted that he had been unable to escape from the neighborhood, and it was in the boldness of desperation that he had chosen his retreat so near the State road that he could hear the voices of the country folk as they passed to and from town.

He sat down to cogitate. "Ef I could git word to Rosy, or git to Rosy, I'd be all right; but, Lordy! I can't do nary one on 'em."

The train whizzed out from a cutting and whistled sharply as it tore along. The negro grinned with pleasure. He was so much a savage that this nomadic existence, though hunted and tortured by fear, was sweet to him.

"Howdy, gemmen!" he chuckled, as, peering through the pine boughs, he recognized some of his fellow-convicts on the train. "Don't you wish you was me? Plenty grub, heap o' new clo'es and no work to do. Ho, ho!"

He rose and drew out a bundle, undid it, viewed its contents with a series of laughing explosions, and then presently doffed his striped suit and arrayed himself anew.

"Mighty fine clo'es fer a fac'; cost a heap o' money."

He softly patted his limbs, twisted his neck to get a glimpse of his back, and creased all his black face into one big smile. A mirror would have made his rapture perfect.

"Rosy won't know me in dese yere. She'll tek me fer a preacher jest from confunce."

He changed back to his striped suit and tied up his bundle. A sharp wind sprang up and drove before it icy drops of rain.

"Golly!" muttered the darky. "Ain't it cold? I'll resk a fire arter dark."

Down to the doctor's farm everybody was hurrying to get the crops under shelter. The last load had gone in when Jule Fraley looked up at the sky. The clouds were rolling up like a curtain, showing the far mountains a deep, intense blue etched with an amber sky.

"Durned ef it's going to storm, after all," said Jule.

Suddenly he straightened himself.

"Bud!" he called sharply. "Look yon—on the mountain. Ain't thet smoke?"

Bud could see as far as an Indian.

"Yes. Thet's smoke."

"Ther' ain't no house thar?"

"Naw. Nary house."

Jule walked away briskly.

Two hours later five men parted the umbrageous pines and tip-toed cautiously toward a small opening under a great rock on the mountain side. A whiff of warm air stole out to them. A great bed of coals glowed redly, and, with his feet to the fire, a negro in convict dress lay sound asleep. The men had their guns ready. One pointed his piece upward and a shot tore through the tree tops. The negro was on his feet in an instant.

"We've got you!" said one.

He looked from one to the other and his dark face grew a shade lighter.

"I surrender, gemmen!" he said, calmly.

Shortly after this event Daddy John reappeared in his new clothes. He wore them almost constantly for a few weeks, and then they were suddenly retired from public observation, and Daddy went about looking as if the scarecrow in the cornfield had stepped down from his perch and toddled off to seek winter quarters. The doctor was puzzled. When, at last, she questioned Jule Fraley, Jule shook his head mysteriously.

"I reckon I kin tell yer ef yer won't be put out about it."

"Well, well! Do so!"

"I reckon," in a hushed voice, "'at he's keepin' of 'em ter be buried in."—New York Tribune.

Insects on Hawaii.

Prof. Albert Koebele, of California, has made a three years' contract with the Hawaiian Government to destroy the insect pests of the islands. His method is to get insects harmless to man to kill noxious insects.

Old Time Roadmaking.

In old times farmers had an idea of making an embankment in the road, the higher the better, width not considered, which they called turnpiking, and for one year afterward the road was worse than it ever was before, as it was thrown up crude and loose and took water and puddling to pack it.

Influence of Good Roads.

A prominent real estate dealer says in the New York Recorder: "I believe that within the past three years not less than 10,000 families have removed from New York and Brooklyn and taken up their residence in New Jersey solely on acount of the many miles of superior roads which have been built between the suburban towns of that State under the road improvement law."

Best Time for Repairing.

There is hardly a month in the year when the road machine cannot be used to advantage in the road, but spring is the best time to do efficient work, because the soil is loose and roots of grass and weeds do not interfere. Every spring, before the ground becomes too hard, the road should be gone over thoroughly with the road machine, the ditches cleaned out, so that water may have a free outlet; ruts and holes filled, elevations in the road and the shoulders on the side of the road planed off, the grade improved and the road put in a good condition generally.—Country Roads.

Preserve the Roads.

The effort to secure wide tires on heavy wagons in the interest of better roads has again been defeated in the Massachusetts Legislature, which leads the Springfield Republican to remark:

Some things are tolerated simply because we are so wonted to them. We shall never maintain good roads until heavy wagons are regulated so that when loaded they will not cut the ordinary roadbed to pieces. If our long time policy of repairing roads only to see them cut into ruts every year were proposed as an original proposition it would be rejected as too foolish for serious consideration. Yet because we began the wrong way it takes a long time to bring about the right thing. But it must come, and the modern agitation for better roads ought to hasten its advent. Here is a pointer for wheelmen and all the rest of us who want to get out of ruts.

Coarse Laughter.

A laugh may be loud and yet not coarse, it may be vigorous and yet cultured, and it may be bass and yet refined. There is no mistaking the coarse laugh. We feel it to be so, though we cannot subtlely define wherein the coarseness exists. We know it makes a severe demand on the nervous resources of both the hearer and the laughter, and that it does good to neither man nor beast. It is altogether destitute of the finer and the refining elements of humanity, and so utterly wanting in natural melody, it is more akin to the noise of the laughing hyena than to any other articulate sound. These people repel us by their laugh. The features, the tone, the sound and the manner all repel us. We may even in some cases be anxious to think favorably of the man or woman—for we regret to add that some women, and those not outcasts, have a coarse laugh—but we find it impossible to do so. We instinctively and with our whole soul shrink from them. Involuntarily we turn from them and can have no faith in them. The laugh was the window through which we saw into their soul; it was the open door which revealed their heart, and it was the drawn curtain which laid bare the inner spirit. We may even sorrow that we heard him or her laugh; but we have heard it, and it is never to be forgotten. We put a heap of character into a laugh; some people (seldom bad ones) seem as if they could infuse their whole soul into it. The coarse man puts enough of his coarse nature into a laugh to make us turn from him, and make us always feel uneasy in his society.

Italian Gardens.

To have flowers growing in the ground all summer is almost an impossibility in Italy. Flowers are merely a crop, like corn, hemp, or beans; you must be satisfied with fallow soil when they are over. I say these things, learned by bitter experience of flowerless summers, to explain why Italian flower gardening mainly takes refuge in pots—from the great ornamented lemon jars down to the pots of carnations, double geraniums, tube roses, and jasmines on every wall, on every ledge or window-sill; so much so, in fact, that even the famous sweet basil, and with it young Lorenzo's head, had to be planted in a pot. Thus the Italian garden, like the Moorish one, gradually became a place of greenery and water; a few hedges of box and cypress—exhaling its resinous breath in the sunshine—leading up to the long, flat Tuscan house, with its tower or pillared loggia under the roof to take the air and dry linen; a few quaintly cut trees set here and there, along with the twisted mulberry tree where the family drank its wine and ate its fruit of an evening; a little grove of ilexes to the back, in whose shade you could sleep while the cicalas buzzed at noon; some cypresses gathered together into a screen, just to separate the garden from the olive yard above; perhaps a balustrade set at the end of the bowling green, that you might see, even from a distance, the shimmery blue valley below, the pale blue distant hills; and if you had it, some antique statue, not good enough for the courtyard of the town house, set on the balustrade or against the tree; also, where water was plentiful, a little grotto scooped out under that semicircular screen of cypresses. A very modest place, but an attractive one, withal, having its own peculiar charm.

A Cottage on Wheels.

For over a year a well-known artist on the staff of a California magazine has lived, with his wife, in a cottage on wheels. The original cost of the building was five hundred dollars, and its owner has already made enough by the saving in rent and expenses to pay for it. The van is somewhat similar to those in use by gypsies, but is fitted up in much more comfortable style. It has one room ten feet long, four and a half feet wide and six feet three inches high, and in this space the artist and his wife live, eat and sleep. At one end of the wagon, over the wheels, is a raised platform, and here is a pocket edition of a cooking stove, with a collection of shining pots and pans around it. Under the seat of the wagon is the housewife's cupboard, and her table consists of the top of a big trunk which contains the wardrobe of the pair. The beds consist of two cushions laid out upon the floor of the wagon, and the bedding is stored in a box under the wagon, reached by a trap door in its floor. The whole, including two persons, the little stove and the big trunk, weighs less than twenty-four hundred pounds, and can be taken anywhere by two horses. Last winter the artist made a leisurely tour of the hills and valleys, sketching as he went. What an idyllic combination of duty and pleasure this seems to the toilers perpetually warring against their nomadic instincts, but who must, for obvious reasons, remain at desk or bench to the end of their days!

Slightly Mixed.

The most recent instances of mixed metaphors come from Germany. "We will," cried an inspired democrat, "burn all our ships, and with every sail unfurled, steer boldly out into the ocean of freedom!" A Pan-Germanist mayor of a Rhineland corporation rose still higher in an address to the emperor. He said: "No Austria, no Prussia, one only Germany—such were the words the mouth of your imperial majesty has always had in its eye." A learned professor, criticising a book of poems, writes: "Out in the dark regions of philosophical problems the poet suddenly lets swarms of songs dive up, carrying far-flashing pearls of thought in their beaks." Songs and beaks are certainly related to one another, but were never seen in that incongruous connection before. A German preacher, speaking of a repentant girl, said: "She knelt in the temple of her interior and prayed fervently"—a feat no India rubber doll could imitate. The German parliamentary oratory of the present day affords many examples of metaphor mixture; but one must suffice. Count Frankenberg is the author of it. A few years ago he pointed out to his countrymen the necessity of "seizing the stream of time by the forelock." But none of these pearls of thought and expressions surpasses the speech of the immortal Joseph Prudhomme on being presented with a sword of honor by the company he commanded in the National Guard of France. "Gentlemen," said he, "this sword is the brightest day of my life!"

Portrait Collectors.

One of the most lasting of hobbies is that of portrait collecting. You may spend a small fortune on it if you like, though the expenditure of ten or twenty cents a month will bring very satisfactory returns, for many of the portraits in the illustrated magazines are well worth preserving. There is a wide variety of choice in portraits. Historical personages, artists and painters, singers, great soldiers, women of note and literary celebrities are always interesting subjects. In making a portrait scrap-book, pictures having any salient point or costume should be dated; they really form as good a record of changing fashion as some fashion magazines—just as the novel is a better photograph of social customs than is any written history. The work of collecting is very fascinating; new ideas develop as it progresses, so that every scrap-book may have a character of its own.

Not in Public Employment.

The origin of the word "private" when applied to a soldier in the ranks may be traced to the much earlier use of the same word applied to civilians, "a private man or citizen"—that is, one not invested with public office or employment. The epithet being thus applied in common language to any civilian not holding office, has by a slight extension of meaning been used to signify soldiers not holding rank.

Passion Plays.

What are called "passion" and "miracle" plays are relics of a time when the people were very ignorant; and there were no Bibles and no books, for printing had not been invented. These plays were an effort to teach the truths of religion under great difficulties, and in their day were useful.

Indestructible Fire.

Paper indestructible by fire has been invented in Paris. A specimen of it was subjected to a severe test—148 hours in a potter's furnace—and came out with its glaze almost perfect.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

IRV. H. MULHOLLAND, EDITOR.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.

FRIDAY, JULY 31 ..... 1896

Be sure you register, so as to be able to cast a vote for Bryan and silver.

In an interview published in the dispatches Henry Watterson, who has bolted the Democratic ticket and denounced the Chicago platform, says of Mr. Bryan. "He is fervid, sincere, poor and honest. He is an exceptional and worthy man." That's just the manner of man the people want, Mr. Watterson; that's just the manner of man the people are going to have.

Two years ago the Republican papers, observing the rapid growth of the Populist party at the expense of the Democratic organization, patted the seceders on the back most lovingly and said all kinds of pretty sayings about them. Now that there is a prospect of the same Populists electing Mr. Bryan for president they are charged with willful disregard for principle, and are characterized as weaklings, anarchists, and numerous other appellations so common to vitious journals.

Eighty-two prospectors who left Cooks Inlet as late as June 25th have arrived at Seattle, ready to vote that much vaunted country one of the greatest mining fakes ever boomed in the West. They say that of the 2000 or more miners who went up in the spring not one has found gold. There is now talk of lynching the men who worked up the sensation in order to sell outfits and provisions to the miners and make money out of their fares.

And now some of the Republican papers are poking fun at the Democrats because their candidate for president put up at a second class hotel while at the Chicago convention, instead of drawing checks to the extent of $50 or so daily for more luxurious quarters. Doubtless it was not so much a matter of preference on Mr. Bryan's part as of necessity. Then, too, it was due largely to misfortune, for you know that not every one could be backed by a Hanna. There are not enough of him to go round.

The London Globe, of July 27th, published a long article headed, "American Communism," which concludes as follows: "There is a clear issue between the gold standard allies to extreme protection and free coinage coupled with confiscatory socialism. Whether McKinley or Bryan is elected, British interests are bound to suffer. While the victory of McKinley is certain to harass our trade with the United States, that of Bryan could not fail to produce a financial convulsion, which might shake the old world to the very foundations."

If Daniel Webster were alive today and should repeat in the United States senate the words he uttered there upon an occasion when a heated financial discussion was in progress, the Republican papers would characterize him as an "anarchist." The immortal statesman said upon that occasion:

"The people wonder why financial panics occur so frequently. I can tell them why. It is to the interest of bankers and brokers that they should occur. It is one of the specious methods by which these despotic and utterly useless knaves rob the producing, manufacturing and mercantile classes of their honest earnings. It is one of the chief plans by which this infamous ring is riveting the chains of slavery upon the limbs of labor. It is one of the chief means adopted to build up a money aristocracy that shall live in idly luxury and ape the pretentious airs of European nobility."

The above sentiment is exactly similar to that being expressed by Mr. Bryan, and which has won him the honorable distinction of being daubed as an "anarchist" by shylocks and their servile newspaper representatives.

The good people of New England and the suburbs of Wall street who have had the habit of placidly thinking that they control the nation must be rubbing their eyes in astonishment these days at the activity of Western men in political affairs. Not only is the Presidential nominee, who seems already well on his way to the White House, a resident of a prairie State, but in three of the great conventions Western men have been the controlling spirits and have forced into the platforms principles that embody wide-awake Western ideas of progressive government. The nomination of Bryan has been received in certain conservative, hardshell sections of the far East with much the same incredulity and amazement that greeted the first nomination of Lincoln. There was then nothing but derision in those sections for the rail-splitter and Ohio-river boatman from far Western Illinois.

The center of the nation's population has been moving steadily towards the Pacific, but the placid statesmen of the Housatonic region have probably never had that fact so forcibly brought to their attention as during the last few weeks. No one but a Californian in Washington, seeking recognition of the Government of the needs of his State, can realize the disdain with which the far West is regarded by many narrow-minded statesmen. But during the present convention season Californians and their Nevada associates have been doing all of their share in helping to guide the ship of state. It was a Californian who put Sewall in nomination; a man from Montana helped frame the Populist platform, and one of the best known mining men of the State is now Chairman of the Silver party's National Executive Committee. The West really has been surprising the East, and it will do so again in November.
